UNITED STATES IS STILL WAITING FOR CARRANZA'S REPLY

PRESIDENT WILSON MAKES NO MOVE TO LAY MATTER BEFORE CONGRESS AND HOUSE ADJOURNS OVER JULY 4—NO DIPLOMATIC DEVELOPMENTS.

ARMY IS TO RECEIVE MORE MONEY

In Second Section of Mexican Memorandum, Charges Are Made That Funston Misrepresented to Obregon and That This Country Is Intentionally Withholding Ammunition.

Washington, July 1.—With the adjournment of the house tonight over the Fourth of July it becomes highly improbable that the crisis between the United States and the de facto government of Mexico would come to final issues before Wednesday at the earliest.

Despite growing impatience over General Carranza's delay in complying with demands that he state his intentions toward American troops in Mexico, President Wilson made no move today toward laying the situation before congress. Officials say he will wait some days at least for a reply to the note sent a week ago tomorrow provided there are no further attacks upon General Pershing's men in the meantime.

Before the de facto government had complied with the first demand made in that note by releasing the prisoners taken at Carrizal, it was expected the president would act within a time limit fixed in his own mind, if there was no reply or an unfavorable one. The effect of the release order apparently has been to lengthen this time limit, though how much only the president himself knows.

NO DIPLOMATIC DEVELOPMENTS.

There were no official dispatches today dealing with the probable tenor of the note it is known that the de facto government officials are framing. Private messages had nothing to add to the gloomy outlook they reflected yesterday. In fact there were no developments of any sort during the day in the diplomatic situation although the war department and congress still ground away on measures of preparation against whatever the future may hold.

Under the war department censorship, no information General Funston or the general's staff may have as to movements of Mexican troops beyond the border was available. Rumors said Carranza forces were massing around the strip of territory occupied by General Pershing's men, leaving open only the well guarded road back to the border. War department officials refused to discuss these reports. It is known, however, that they are fully confident of General Pershing's ability to protect himself under any circumstances.

The rumored movements of Mexican troops, however, appear to be in line with the decision General Carranza is said by private advices to have adopted. It was predicted that he would reaffirm his intention to allow no operations of the American forces on Mexican soil except toward the border. It was the order to this effect to General Trevino, commanding in Chihuahua state, which gave the present crisis its most omnious aspect. Secretary Lansing has defined the order asf a hostile act and tersely asked the de facto government if it desired that it should be so construed. On the answer to that inquiry hangs whatever action President Wilson has planned.

A few bulletins written in abrupt military style were given out during the day by Secretary Baker's new military aide, Major MacArthur. They told of the movement of various unnamed national guard regiments to the border, of plans and regulations under which regular officers would be assigned to aid in the training of state troops and of other matters connected with the mobilization of 100,000 men to reinforce General Funston's lines.

No News of Any Clashes Along Texas-Mexico Border

San Antonio, Tex., July 1.—While the war department was moving into the frontier thousands of the national guard, General Obregon, Carranza's minister of war, was engaged today in strengthening his border army, minor changes were directed by him in his armies that now are quartered in force in almost all the northern cities except a few that lie under the American guns, according to information that reached the intelligence department at Fort Sam Houston.

It was another day without news of any clashes between Mexican and American troops that face each other across the line but almost all information obtainable indicated that Mexican army officers were convinced that war was practically inovitable.

One of General Pershing's aviators investigated reports that Mexican troops had been concentrated at Guzman and that they even had begun a march towards the American lines, but his report showed the improbability of immediate action from that quarter. He flew over Guzman, which is east of the line General Pershing has established and reported that the number of Mexican troops now there appeared not more than two thousand and that apparently no preparations for an early move were being made. Strong forces have been distributed along lines paralleling his positions both on the east and west but General Funston and his staff officers continued to believe that he could take care of himself if the Mexicans did begin to close in.

Increased caution was displayed at army headquarters today to keep secret the movement towards the border of the national guardsmen. Agents of the department of justice were working in close touch with the military in efforts to learn of any plot to interfere with the movement of trains and soldier guards watched the more important bridges along the railroads that stretch through the southern part of Texas. Every guard carried in his belt an unusual amount of ammunition and the orders that had been given were definite and drastic.

MOBILIZATION BEING WORKED OUT.

By the end of the week those in charge of the mobilization believe that it will be almost completed. Without hitch and without having interfered with the regular traffic the American Railway association were moving the trains to their destination and reports to the quartermaster department indicated the likelihood that there would be no congestion in the traffic.

The First Illinois was the first regiment to go into camp here and it was expected that by tomorrow the Second and Seventh, completing the first brigade commanded by Gen. D. J. Foster, would be here.

The Seventh, Seventy-first and Fourteenth New York infantry passed through San Antonio today on the way to the Brownsville district. Other New York regiments will pass through today and army officers believe that by Wednesday or Thursday the New York movement will be completed.

The New York division headquarters will be at McAllen, where auxiliary troops and the Second brigade made up of the Seventh, Twelfth and Seventy-first regiments will be stationed. The first brigade, comprising the First, Second and Fourteenth infantry, will be at Mission and the Third brigade, of the Third, Sixty-ninth and Seventy-fourth infantry, at Pharr.

With the exception of a part of the Seventh New York and a battalion of Utah artillery, none of the guardsmen have actually reached stations on the border.

GUARDS ENJOY SAN ANTONIO STOP.

Enthusiastic members of the guards made the most of their stops in San Antonio today while waiting for trains to be transferred from one railroad to another. They inspected the historic Alamo, crowded the hotels for baths and gazed curiously at Mexicans occasionally encountered, meanwhile referring to San Antonio as a part of "the front." Out at the camp where the First Illinois had been sent the faces of those who have not become accustomed to the daily heat of approximately 100 degrees were burned a bright red by the blazing sun. Officers were working hard to get the camp in shape, while regular army officers appeared from time to time to offer suggestions and assistance. Not all of the First's equipment had arrived and the camp tonight was not greatly better than last night, when the men slept in shelter tents.

Unwillingness of a lieutenant of the Eighth cavalry today to assume responsibility when in pursuit of raiders near Fort Hancock served to avert the adding of another complexity to the international situation. Late reports to General Funston told of the raid by eight Mexicans about fifty-four miles southeast of El Paso. Lieut. Edwin N. Hardy of the Eighth cavalry with a small detachment began the pursuit. He did not come within range of the raiders, but followed their trail to a point where it entered the river, leading in the direction of the Mexican side. The Mexicans had driven away a few horses.

The lieutenant reported the incident, adding that he did not feel like assuming the responsibility of following the Mexicans across the Rio Grande. Captain Leroy Eltinge of the Eighth was ordered by General Bell at Fabens to make an investigation and if the trail was found still "hot" it was expected he would follow it across. He was cautioned, however, to avoid, if possible, a conflict with any of Carranza's troops.

Captain Eltinge was instructed to take with him two troops of cavalry sent from El Paso.

Missouri-Pacific Refuses to Grant Employes' Demands

St. Louis, July 1.—The Missouri Pacific railroad today refused to grant any of the demands submitted by the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employes or to arbitrate the matter. Secretary of Labor Wilson was asked by union officials to send two commissioners to St. Louis to mediate.

Famous Faust Cafe of St. Louis Closed

St. Louis, July 1.—The Faust, for forty-five years one of the show places of St. Louis and world famous as a cafe, closed tonight. The decision to close followed the failure of a plan of 500 wealthy St. Louisians to keep the place open by monthly dues. The late Tony Faust founded the cafe in 1871.

Italian Ships Sunk.

London, July 2, 12:03 a. m.—The Italian sailing vessel Carlo Alberta and the British steamer Windermere have been sunk, according to reports to Lloyds.

AMERICAN WOMAN TAKEN FROM TRAIN IN MEXICO

Nogales, Ariz., July 1.—Mrs. William Hamilton, wife of an American connected with the Los Mochis Sugar company of Sonora, was taken from a train yesterday at Lomas, four miles south of the border by Major Pelon Palma, military trainmaster of Sonora, according to reports received here today.

United States Consul Simpich immediately demanded her release.

Mrs. Hamilton was traveling on a passport issued by General Estrada at Hermosillo.

PARKER WILL GET MANY MOTOR TRUCKS

Brownsville, Texas, July 1.—Eight complete motor truck companies, each to consist of thirty-three machines, are to be added to the military equipment of Brig. Gen. James Parker, commanding the Brownsville district, according to announcement made at army headquarters here today. With these machines, it was said, a mobile force of between 4,000 and 5,000 men with all necessary equipment for effective work at considerable distance from supply bases, can be handled.

It was pointed out that in operating against an enemy depending on a line of railroad for sustenance, the motor companies would be markedly effective as with their use extensive flank movements can be made, compelling the enemy to fall back in order to prevent the rail line from being cut. It is also anticipated by officers that the motor companies will be used in connection with possible cavalry expeditions, making possible advances of thirty miles a day with perfect safety.

Plans now are to use twenty-eight trucks in each company to carry troops, the remaining five to carry gasoline and supplies. When the trucks will arrive or where they are coming from was not divulged.

Jesse M. Moseley Arrested in Laredo

Laredo, July 1.—Jesse M. Moseley, carrying a commission in the Carranza army as a major in the medical corps signed by General Nafarrate, commander at Tampico, was arrested here last night by Capt. Tom Ross, special agent of the department of justice, and charged with having entered the United States for the purpose of enlisting negroes for the Mexican army. It has not been determined whether he is an American negro, but he speaks English without foreign accent, it was said.

Missouri Guard Entrains.

Nevada, Mo., July 1.—The first section of the second contingent of the Missouri National Guard left here at 5:20 o'clock this afternoon, presumably for Laredo, Texas . The troops constituted three batteries of field artillery and the signal corps, a total of 521 men and eighteen officers. The route was not made public. The second section was scheduled to leave an hour later.

HERO OF THE HOUR

Capt. Lewis S. Morey.

Capt. Lewis S. Morey of the Tenth cavalry, which was ambushed by Mexicans at Carrizal, is the hero of the hour. Wounded and near death, Captain Morey ordered the troopers who escaped with him from the engagement to seek safety and let him die alone on the desert. He was later picked up by the Eleventh cavalry.

BORDER PATROL IS BEING REDISTRIBUTED

SEVERAL THOUSAND MORE NATIONAL GUARDSMEN ARRIVE IN EL PASO.

Two Troops of Eighth Cavalry Sent to Fort Hancock to Hunt Down Bandits.

El Paso, Tex., July 1.—Mobilization of a large part of the national guard organizations ordered to El Paso was expected tonight to be completed before daylight. Several trains carrying ten thousand guardsmen from Massachusetts and New Jersey arrived today augmenting the El Paso regular garrison of 4,000 men and others are expected within the next twenty-four hours including contingents from Pennsylvania.

Coincident with the arrival of the first of the guard organizations the Massachusetts hospital and ambulance corps, what appeared to be a redistribution of troops in this border patrol district was begun. Two troops of the Eighth cavalry were dispatched from Fort Bliss to Fort Hancock, Texas, fifty-three miles east of El Paso, presumably to reinforce the garrison there. It was reported, however, that they also are to hunt Mexican rustlers said to have crossed the border to a Texas ranch last night and to have stolen a few head of stock.

ARMORED MOTOR TRUCKS BEING TESTED.

While little brown tent cities were springing up for the national guardsmen on several camp sites in El Paso, military officials at Fort Bliss were testing armored motor trucks. These machines, equipped with machine guns, made several charges across the parade grounds under conditions arranged to represent as nearly as possible actual warfare. Officers in charge of the experiments reported they were satisfied with the results obtained.

Andres Garcia, Mexican consul to El Paso, received authorization today from Alvaro Obregon, Mexican minister of war, to assist the American military authorities in removing the bodies of United States soldiers killed at Carrizal to the United States for burial.

NEW JERSEY BATTERY TO DOUGLAS.

Battery B, New Jersey National Guard, which reached here tonight, is to entrain tomorrow for Douglas, Arizona, according to a report current here. It was pointed out that while the troops now on station in Douglas are ample in any eventuality to protect the town and its environs the San Bernardino valley lying between Douglas and the Arizona-New Mexico line is rich in forage for horses and cattle and is practically unprotected from possible bandit forays from the Mexican side.

The guardsmen, it was said, are to relieve cavalry at Douglas, who will be ordered to the valley. Military authorities here declined to discuss the report because of the censorship upon news of troop movements.

Scott Will Make Appointments Soon

Washington, July 1.—Designation of army officers to national guard commands will be made by General Scott, chief of staff. Regular officers will be eligible to command divisions or brigades and those detailed for national guard duty will be ranked as colonels and lieutenant colonels.

National guard chaplains, it was announced today, will not remain attached to distinctive regiments but will be mustered into the federal service at the rate of one for every twelve companies.

Chaplains with seven years' service will be commissioned as captains and the others as first lieutenants.

House and Senate Approve Large Bill

Washington, July 1.—Approval of a conference report on the biggest fortifications appropriation bill ever sent to the white house was voted today by the house and senate. It carries $25,748,050 in appropriations and $13,800,000 for authorized contracts. The senate added $4,880,050 to the house total, largely increasing items for reserve ammunition.

SWEEPING RESISTLESSLY ONWARD BRITISH DRIVE DEEP INTO GERMAN LINE

French Also Join in Grand Offensive Movement, Which Is Resulting in Great Gains Over Battle Front of Twenty-five Miles—Thousands of Teutonic Prisoners Already Taken and Forward Movement Continues.

ITALIANS REPORT STILL MORE VICTORIES

In Region of Kolomea Russians Capture Numerous Villages and Are Seizing Strong Positions in Mountains of Bukowina—Von Linsengen Claims Successes Southwest of Lutsk—Famous Thiaumont Work Is Again in Hands of French.

By the Associated Press.

British and French troops thrown forward in a grand offensive against the German lines on both sides of the river Somme, sixty miles north of Paris, have penetrated at one point to a depth of five miles; taken several villages and captured a labyrinth of trenches extending to a depth of one thousand yards on a front of seven miles. The drive, the most spectacular in this region since the British captured Loos last September, began Saturday morning after the German trenches had been bathed in a hail of shells from guns of every calibre for days. Progress has been reported along the entire front of about twenty-five miles.

The greatest success gained by the British was on the right. In the center they captured what are designated in the official report as "many strong points" along a front of four miles. But north of the Ancre valley to Gomme-Court powerful counter attacks by the Germans have resulted in forcing the British back from various sections of the ground gained in their first onslaughts.

MANY GERMAN PRISONERS TAKEN.

The town of Albert was the starting point of one of the fiercest thrusts, the British advancing from east of the town to Mont Auban, more than five miles away. Besides Mont Auban and Serre, the villages of Hebuterne, La Boiselle and Mametz have been captured. Two thousand German prisoners have passed through the British collecting stations.

In co-operation with the British, the French initiated a strong offensive. South of the Somme they captured four villages and north of that river they established themselves in the neighborhood of Hardecourt and Curlu. The number of unwounded German prisoners taken by the French had reached 3500 up to the time of the sending of the last official report.

The recapture of the famous Thiaumont work by the French also has been effected. This important strategic point has changed hands several times and around it probably thousands of men have fallen. On the left bank of the Meuse the fighting is most intense around Hill 304, Le Morte Homme and Avocourt.

ITALIANS ARE STILL SUCCESSFUL.

In the Trentino, the Italians continue to advance along the entire Posina line and in the Arsa valley. Artillery bombardments mark the action on the rest of the Austro-Italian front.

While the Russians report progress south of the Dniester river in Galicia, the Austro-Germans claim the capture of Russian works west and northwest of Lutsk especially in the vicinity of Sokul, Volhynia.

Maintaining their drive against the Austrians in Galicia in the region of Kolomea, the Russians have captured many villages. North of Kimpolung, Bukowina, the Russians already are in the mountains and they report the seizure of several strong positions. Attacks of German troops in the region of the Lipa were repulsed with heavy losses, Petrograd asserts.

The German troops under General Von Linsingen have taken Russia positions west of Kolki and southwest of Sokul. Fighting continues in progress southwest of Lutsk. Gen. Von Linsingen's forces since June 16, have captured twenty-six officers and 3,165 men. Petrograd reports the number of prisoners taken from June 4 to June 30, inclusive, as 217,000 officers and men.

British All Ready.

British Headquarters in France, July 1, Via London.—Under a pall of shell smoke, with the unbroken roar of artillery, the struggle over the longest line of any offensive yet undertaken on the western front, which began at 7:30 o'clock this morning, is continuing at this hour.

From a hill the Associated Press correspondent watched the beginning of the battle. For weeks he had witnessed preparation for the first considerable effort of the new British army. Notwithstanding the fact that troops were moved to the front in immense numbers for the attack, there are still remaining billets in the rear which apparently are unnecessary in working out the present plans.

With deliberate and methodical precision the gathering of human and mechanical material proceeded. The whole line was included in the preliminary bombardment for the purpose of deceiving the Germans as to the point of attack.

Overwhelming as was the power of the guns, the grim and significant spectacle was the sight of the detachments of infantry, in field fighting equipment, moving forward until finally the dugouts were hives of khaki about to swarm forth for the battle. Each of the officers had maps and directions in detail of the part his unit was to play in the whole complicated scheme of attack. The men had sewed in their uniforms insignia to designate the different units amid the dust and smoke of action.

MEN SING AS THEY MARCH.

As the battalions marched they sang the tunes they used to sing on the drill grounds at home. There were quiet and undemonstrative English, speaking with Yorkshire or Cornwall accent, or maybe breaking out in gibes in the slang of the London cockney. There were brawny Scots, with kilts and steel mushroom helmets, suggesting medieval men-at-arms. An Irish battalion was whistling the Marseillaise.

The men realized the fearful work just ahead.

"But it is in the contract," said a young Englishman. "It is what we expected. It is our turn to make good."

As the days of the bombardment passed the air of expectancy was noticeable everywhere through the army.

Last night the word was passed that the infantry was to make the assault this morning. At dawn the correspondent ascended a hill in the region of Albert. The sun rose brilliantly, promising another fine day. This was even more welcome than yesterday to artillery observers who must move the guns and carry forward the fire to protect their advance. On the average clear day, from this point of view, in front of the Vally Ancre river, both the German and the French trenches are visible. Ridges and hills, rich farming lands and numerous villages roll away to the eastward.

Troops Passing Through.

Fort Worth, Texas, July 1.—For the twelve hours ending at noon today, eleven trains carrying state troops to the border passed through Fort Worth. These trains bore Massachusetts and New Jersey troops, most of them being destined for El Paso. Railroad officials are secretive about the movement of train troops because west and south of Fort Worth the roads employ many Mexicans as section hands.

Ask Money for Panama.

Washington, July 1.—Secretary Baker today asked congress for $4,616,397 for Panama canal protection, of which $3,823,000 would be for land defense armaments and ammunition and $325,000 for building roads in the canal zone. He asked $60,000 for searchlights.

Government's Fiscal Year Closes With Largest Balance In the Treasury Since 1908

Washington, July 1.—The government closed its fiscal year yesterday with total receipts of $838,403,969 and total disbursements of $759,666,159, an excess of $78,737,810, compared with a deficit of $59,436,580 for the year ending June 30, last. Both the income tax and the internal revenue receipts in 1916 showed up far above the estimates made by Secretary McAdoo and swelled the balance. Income tax receipts amounted to $124,867,490, compared with $79,828,675 last year, an increase of about $15,000,000 over the amount expected by officials even as late as a week ago. Of the total, $56,905,941 comes from corporations and $67,957,488 from individuals.

The balance in the general fund at the close of the year was $236,879,590, including amounts to the credit of disbursing officers. The actual balance was $174,965,231, the largest balance in the general fund since 1908.

In a statement analyzing the figures, Secretary McAdoo said larger internal revenue receipts for the year have been due in a great measure to "the unprecedentd prosperity of the country and th vigorous enforcement of the internal revenue laws."

Officers were working hard to get the camp in shape, while regular army officers appeared from time to time to offer suggestions and assistance. Not all of the First's equipment had arrived and the camp tonight was not greatly better than last night, when the men slept in shelter tents.

Unwillingness of a lieutenant of the Eighth cavalry today to assume responsibility when in pursuit of raiders near Fort Hancock served to avert the adding of another complexity to the international situation. Late reports to General Funston told of the raid by eight Mexicans about fifty-four miles southeast of El Paso. Lieut. Edwin N. Hardy of the Eighth cavalry with a small detachment began the pursuit. He did not come within range of the raiders, but followed their trail to a point where it entered the river, leading in the direction of the Mexican side. The Mexicans had driven away a few horses.

The lieutenant reported the incident, adding that he did not feel like assuming the responsibility of following the Mexicans across the Rio Grande. Captain Leroy Eltinge of the Eighth was ordered by General Bell at Fabens to make an investigation and if the trail was found still "hot" it was expected he would follow it across. He was cautioned, however, to avoid, if possible, a conflict with any of Carranza's troops.

Captain Eltinge was instructed to take with him two troops of cavalry sent from El Paso.

Missouri-Pacific Refuses to Grant Employes' Demands

St. Louis, July 1.—The Missouri Pacific railroad today refused to grant any of the demands submitted by the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employes or to arbitrate the matter. Secretary of Labor Wilson was asked by union officials to send two commissioners to St. Louis to mediate.

Famous Faust Cafe of St. Louis Closed

St. Louis, July 1.—The Faust, for forty-five years one of the show places of St. Louis and world famous as a cafe, closed tonight. The decision to close followed the failure of a plan of 500 wealthy St. Louisians to keep the place open by monthly dues. The late Tony Faust founded the cafe in 1871.

AMERICAN WOMAN TAKEN FROM TRAIN IN MEXICO

Nogales, Ariz., July 1.—Mrs. William Hamilton, wife of an American connected with the Los Mochis Sugar company of Sonora, was taken from a train yesterday at Lomas, four miles south of the border by Major Pelon Palma, military trainmaster of Sonora, according to reports received here today.

United States Consul Simpich immediately demanded her release.

Mrs. Hamilton was traveling on a passport issued by General Estrada at Hermosillo.

PARKER WILL GET MANY MOTOR TRUCKS

Brownsville, Texas, July 1.—Eight complete motor truck companies, each to consist of thirty-three machines, are to be added to the military equipment of Brig. Gen. James Parker, commanding the Brownsville district, according to announcement made at army headquarters here today. With these machines, it was said, a mobile force of between 4,000 and 5,000 men with all necessary equipment for effective work at considerable distance from supply bases, can be handled.

It was pointed out that in operating against an enemy depending on a line of railroad for sustenance, the motor companies would be markedly effective as with their use extensive flank movements can be made, compelling the enemy to fall back in order to prevent the rail line from being cut. It is also anticipated by officers that the motor companies will be used in connection with possible cavalry expeditions, making possible advances of thirty miles a day with perfect safety.

Plans now are to use twenty-eight trucks in each company to carry troops, the remaining five to carry gasoline and supplies. When the trucks will arrive or where they are coming from was not divulged.

Jesse M. Moseley Arrested in Laredo

Laredo, July 1.—Jesse M. Moseley, carrying a commission in the Carranza army as a major in the medical corps signed by General Nafarrate, commander at Tampico, was arrested here last night by Capt. Tom Ross, special agent of the department of justice, and charged with having entered the United States for the purpose of enlisting negroes for the Mexican army. It has not been determined whether he is an American negro, but he speaks English without foreign accent, it was said.

He was later picked up by the Eleventh cavalry.

SEVERAL THOUSAND MORE NATIONAL GUARDSMEN ARRIVE IN EL PASO.

Two Troops of Eighth Cavalry Sent to Fort Hancock to Hunt Down Bandits.

El Paso, Tex., July 1.—Mobilization of a large part of the national guard organizations ordered to El Paso was expected tonight to be completed before daylight. Several trains carrying ten thousand guardsmen from Massachusetts and New Jersey arrived today augmenting the El Paso regular garrison of 4,000 men and others are expected within the next twenty-four hours including contingents from Pennsylvania.

Coincident with the arrival of the first of the guard organizations the Massachusetts hospital and ambulance corps, what appeared to be a redistribution of troops in this border patrol district was begun. Two troops of the Eighth cavalry were dispatched from Fort Bliss to Fort Hancock, Texas, fifty-three miles east of El Paso, presumably to reinforce the garrison there. It was reported, however, that they also are to hunt Mexican rustlers said to have crossed the border to a Texas ranch last night and to have stolen a few head of stock.

ARMORED MOTOR TRUCKS BEING TESTED.

While little brown tent cities were springing up for the national guardsmen on several camp sites in El Paso, military officials at Fort Bliss were testing armored motor trucks. These machines, equipped with machine guns, made several charges across the parade grounds under conditions arranged to represent as nearly as possible actual warfare. Officers in charge of the experiments reported they were satisfied with the results obtained.

Andres Garcia, Mexican consul to El Paso, received authorization today from Alvaro Obregon, Mexican minister of war, to assist the American military authorities in removing the bodies of United States soldiers killed at Carrizal to the United States for burial.

NEW JERSEY BATTERY TO DOUGLAS.

Battery B, New Jersey National Guard, which reached here tonight, is to entrain tomorrow for Douglas, Arizona, according to a report current here. It was pointed out that while the troops now on station in Douglas are ample in any eventuality to protect the town and its environs the San Bernardino valley living between Douglas and the Arizona-New Mexico line is rich in forage for horses and cattle and is practically unprotected from possible bandit forays from the Mexican side.

The guardsmen, it was said, are to relieve cavalry at Douglas, who will be ordered to the valley. Military authorities here declined to discuss the report because of the censorship upon news of troop movements.

Scott Will Make Appointments Soon

Washington, July 1.—Designation of army officers to national guard commands will be made by General Scott, chief of staff. Regular officers will be eligible to command divisions or brigades and those detailed for national guard duty will be ranked as colonels and lieutenant colonels.

National guard chaplains, it was announced today, will not remain attached to distinctive regiments but will be mustered into the federal service at the rate of one for every twelve companies.

Chaplains with seven years' service will be commissioned as captains and the others as first lieutenants.

House and Senate Approve Large Bill

Washington, July 1.—Approval of a conference report on the biggest fortifications appropriation bill ever sent to the white house was voted today by the house and senate. It carries $25,748,050 in appropriations and $13,800,000 for authorized contracts. The senate added $4,880,050 to the house total, largely increasing items for reserve ammunition.

SWEEPING RESISTLESSLY ONWARD BRITISH DRIVE DEEP INTO GERMAN LINE

French Also Join in Grand Offensive Movement, Which Is Resulting in Great Gains Over Battle Front of Twenty-five Miles—Thousands of Teutonic Prisoners Already Taken and Forward Movement Continues.

ITALIANS REPORT STILL MORE VICTORIES

In Region of Kolomea Russians Capture Numerous Villages and Are Seizing Strong Positions in Mountains of Bukowina—Von Linsengen Claims Successes Southwest of Lutsk—Famous Thiaumont Work Is Again in Hands of French.

By the Associated Press.

British and French troops thrown forward in a grand offensive against the German lines on both sides of the river Somme, sixty miles north of Paris, have penetrated at one point to a depth of five miles; taken several villages and captured a labyrinth of trenches extending to a depth of one thousand yards on a front of seven miles. The drive, the most spectacular in this region since the British captured Loos last September, began Saturday morning after the German trenches had been bathed in a hail of shells from guns of every calibre for days. Progress has been reported along the entire front of about twenty-five miles.

The greatest success gained by the British was on the right. In the center they captured what are designated in the official report as "many strong points" along a front of four miles. But north of the Ancre valley to Gomme-Court powerful counter attacks by the Germans have resulted in forcing the British back from various sections of the ground gained in their first onslaughts.

MANY GERMAN PRISONERS TAKEN.

The town of Albert was the starting point of one of the fiercest thrusts, the British advancing from east of the town to Mont Auban, more than five miles away. Besides Mont Auban and Serre, the villages of Hebuterne, La Boiselle and Mametz have been captured. Two thousand German prisoners have passed through the British collecting stations.

In co-operation with the British, the French initiated a strong offensive South of the Somme they captured four villages and north of that river they established themselves in the neighborhood of Hardecourt and Curlu. The number of unwounded German prisoners taken by the French had reached 3500 up to the time of the sending of the last official report.

The recapture of the famous Thiaumont work by the French also has been effected. This important strategic point has changed hands several times and around it probably thousands of men have fallen. On the left bank of the Meuse the fighting is most intense around Hill 304, Le Morte Homme and Avocourt.

ITALIANS ARE STILL SUCCESSFUL.

In the Trentino, the Italians continue to advance along the entire Posiax line and in the Arsa valley. Artillery bombardments mark the action on the rest of the Austro-Italian front.

While the Russians report progress south of the Dniester river in Galicia, the Austro-Germans claim the capture of Russian works west and northwest of Lutsk especially in the vicinity of Sokul, Volhynia.

Maintaining their drive against the Austrians in Galicia in the region of Kolomea, the Russians have captured many villages. North of Kimpolung, Bukowina, the Russians already are in the mountains and they report the seizure of several strong positions. Attacks of German troops in the region of the Lipa were repulsed with heavy losses, Petrograd asserts.

The German troops under General Von Linsingen have taken Russia positions west of Kolki and southwest of Sokul. Fighting continues in progress southwest of Lutsk. Gen. Von Linsingen's forces since June 16, have captured twenty-six officers and 3,165 men. Petrograd reports the number of prisoners taken from June 4 to June 30, inclusive, as 217,000 officers and men.

British All Ready.

British Headquarters in France, July 1, Via London.—Under a pall of shell smoke, with the unbroken roar of artillery, the struggle over the longest line of any offensive yet undertaken on the western front, which began at 7:30 o'clock this morning, is continuing at this hour.

From a hill the Associated Press correspondent watched the beginning of the battle. For weeks he had witnessed preparation for the first considerable effort of the new British army. Notwithstanding the fact that troops were moved to the front in immense numbers for the attack, there are still remaining billets in the rear which apparently are unnecessary in working out the present plans.

With deliberate and methodical precision the gathering of human and mechanical material proceeded. The whole line was included in the preliminary bombardment for the purpose of deceiving the Germans as to the point of attack.

Overwhelming as was the power of the guns, the grim and significant spectacle was the sight of the detachments of infantry, in field fighting equipment, moving forward until finally the dugouts were hives of khaki about to swarm forth for the battle. Each of the officers had maps and directions in detail of the part his unit was to play in the whole complicated scheme of attack. The men had sewed in their uniforms insignia to designate the different units amid the dust and smoke of action.

MEN SING AS THEY MARCH.

As the battalions marched they sang the tunes they used to sing on the drill grounds at home. There were quiet and undemonstrative English, speaking with Yorkshire or Cornwall accent, or maybe breaking out in gibes in the slang of the London cockney. There were brawny Scots, with kilts and steel mushroom helmets, suggesting medieval men-at-arms. An Irish battalion was whistling the Marseillaise.

The men realized the fearful work just ahead.

"But it is in the contract," said a young Englishman. "It is what we expected. It is our turn to make good."

As the days of the bombardment passed the air of expectancy was noticeable everywhere through the army.

Last night the word was passed that the infantry was to make the assault this morning. At dawn the correspondent ascended a hill in the region of Albert. The sun rose brilliantly, promising another fine day. This was even more welcome than yesterday to artillery observers who must move the guns and carry forward the fire to protect their advance. On the average clear day, from this point of view, in front of the Vally Ancre river, both the German and the French trenches are visible. Ridges and hills, rich farming lands and numerous villages roll away to the eastward.

Troops Passing Through.

Fort Worth, Texas, July 1.—For the twelve hours ending at noon today, eleven trains carrying state troops to the border passed through Fort Worth. These trains bore Massachusetts and New Jersey troops, most of them being destined for El Paso. Railroad officials are secretive about the movement of train troops because west and south of Fort Worth the roads employ many Mexicans as section hands.

Ask Money for Panama.

Washington, July 1.—Secretary Baker today asked congress for $4,618,397 for Panama canal protection, of which $3,823,000 would be for land defense armaments and ammunition and $325,000 for building roads in the canal zone. He asked $60,000 for searchlights.

Government's Fiscal Year Closes With Largest Balance In the Treasury Since 1908

Washington, July 1.—The government closed its fiscal year yesterday with total receipts of $838,403,969 and total disbursements of $759,666,159, an excess of $78,737,810, compared with a deficit of $59,436,580 for the year ending June 30, last. Both the income tax and the internal revenue receipts in 1916 showed up far above the estimates made by Secretary McAdoo and swelled the balance. Income tax receipts amounted to $124,867,490, compared with $79,828,675 last year, an increase of about $15,000,000 over the amount expected by officials even as late as a week ago. Of the total, $56,903,941 comes from corporations and $67,957,488 from individuals.

The balance in the general fund at the close of the year was $236,879,590, including amounts to the credit of disbursing officers. The actual balance was $174,965,231, the largest balance in the general fund since 1908.

In a statement analyzing the figures, Secretary McAdoo said: "The larger internal revenue receipts for the year have been due in a great measure to the unprecedentd prosperity of the country and th vigorous enforcement of the internal revenue laws."

Fifteen men were working in the building when the explosion took place. Company officials are investigating the cause of the explosion.

Mr. McManus was in Houston Saturday, en route to San Antonio, where he will report to Col. Barry L. Roger, southern department quartermaster.

What his duties will be, Mr. McManus was not exactly aware Saturday, stating that he would probably be acquainted with what is expected of him when he reports to Colonel Roger Monday.

Fair of the Eighth Cavalry, was received tonight at the war department. General Beil said the sergeant was justifie dbecause of the suspicious conduct of the Mexican killed and a companion. The killing was the subject of a vigorous protest to the state department by Eliseo Arredondo, Mexican ambassador designate.

By that time Mr. Hughes expects to be in fine physical condition.

CAMP SITE BEING PREPARED FOR TROOPS

FIRST VERMONT INFANTRY WILL ARRIVE ON BORDER VERY SOON.

Many Men at Work in Providing a Water Supply—Railroad Communication Still Open.

Eagle Pass, July 1.—The First Vermont infantry is expected to arrive here sometime within the next twenty-four hours. The camp site for the regiment already has been prepared. Two hundred men were employed today in providing for a water supply for the camp, which will be occupied by the two Kansas regiments which are expected here in the near future. The two Maryland regiments which will be stationed at Eagle Pass also are expected to arrive shortly, but the exact date of arrival is withheld by military authorities here.

Although military officers decline to discuss troop movements, it is reported from local sources that two more batteries of the Third field artillery are expected to reach here early next week.

Railroad communication btween Piedras Negras and Eagle Pass and the interior of Mexico is still open. Two Americans who came to the border some time ago expected to return to Monclova late tonight. General Francisco Murgia, commanding the Mexican troops in Coahuila, was reported today to be in Monclova.

A Mexican engineer, switching cars on the Piedras Negras side of the river tonight shoved several freight cars onto the international bridge. The rails had been removed from the bridge soem time ago by the Mexicans, so the cars overturned, blocking the structure.

HOLLAND PREPARED FOR HARD FIGHTING

The Hague, Netherlands. — (Correspondence of the Associated Press.)—Interesting information as to what has been accomplished in preparing the Dutch army for modern warfare in the twenty-one months during which it has now been on a war footing, was contained in a statement presented to parliament by the minister of war, Major General N. Bosboom, when he asked for a fresh appropriation of $40,000,000 to cover mobilization expenses.

Even a partial demobilization is still out of the question, according to the war minister.

Answering the question whether the Dutch army was adequately prepared for war and whether the material and equipment fulfill modern requirements, he said that although it was inadvisable to make public information which might benefit a possible enemy, there was no doubt the Dutch soldiers could face the prospect of war with confidence.

In August, 1914, the material and equipment left much to be desired. The workshops of the kingdom were not ready for mass production. These shops have been enlarged and a hundred factories have been equipped for the production of war material. There is a great supply of hand grenades, in the use of which the troops have been trained. Gas masks, steel helmits, modern engineering material, trench shields, barbed wire, and protectvie material have been made in large quantities.

Searchlights for coast defense, land positions, and field troops have been increased. Automobile stations for wireless telegraphy have been formed. The army has at its disposal a great number of motor lorries for the transport of troops and wounded. The number of aeroplanes has been largely increased. These are provided with bombs, machine guns and quick-firers and, as regards speed and raising power, they have been brought up to the standard prevailing abroda. Private industry has co-operated in the building of new aeroplanes, although Holland remains dependent on foreign countries for motors.

As regards the medical service, the reserve hospital accommodation has been increased by arrangements with 150 civilian nursing institutions. Moreover, an institute of military dentists has been established. Vaccination against smallpox, typhus and meningitis is being carried out.

An unfavorable comment on the relations between commanders and men in the Dutch army is the fact, now made known, that many thousands of soldiers persisted in going on furlough at Easter, when leave was refused them, owing to the special circumstances that made the position dangerous for Holland. Severe punishment has been meted out to the men concerned. Incidentally, the minister mentioned that there were fifty-two suicides in the army at the beginning of mobilization.

No special announcement is made regarding the number of trained men which the country now possesses, but former Minister of War Mr. H. Colyn says the total has increased to some 370,000 and that if all the further available Landstorm are trained there will be a force of 650,000 men available.

PASSENGERS BRING STORY OF A BATTLE

Galveston, July 1.—With seventy-nine passengers, of whom but forty are listed on the ship's passenger manifest, the Wolvin line steamship Dade arrived here today.

The passengers brought a story of a brief clash between American sailors and Carranza soldiers at Tampico last Tuesday.

According to the passengers, the sailors were from the cruiser Salem and were making soundings in the harbor when they were fired on by Carranza troops. Two of them were injured. The Americans returned the fire and retired to the Salem. Captain Scott of the American gunboat Marietta in the harbor demanded an explanation of General Nafarrate. The general replied that he could not read English, returning the note. A new demand was not sent, it was said. The gunboats Marietta and Machias are lying at Tampico, stripped for action, the refugees say.

The party reported Vera Cruz to be very quiet. About 350 Americans are being cared for there on the battleship Nebraska.

the $182,000,000 measure passed by the house will reach a total of more than $300,000,000 when reported to the senate.

Among items added today were $13,000,000 for the army aviation service, $1,545,490 for the signal corps, $12,200,000 for national guard field artillery and ammunition, $4,586,000 for machine guns, $1,000,000 for armored motor cars and $5,000,000 for ordnance stores.

In the house the appropriations committee faced another angle of the Mexican trouble. Secretary Lansing called for an additional $300,000 to get Americans out of Mexico.

"The conditions are such at the present time," the secretary said in a memorandum which accompanied the estimate, "that in my opinion it is highly desirable that every American citizen should leave Mexico at the earliest possible moment."

From Secretary Baker came hurry estimates of $1,643,500 to meet emergencies on the border. The money is needed to buy equipment for the national guard, ranging from machine guns to engineering implements.

A supply of illuminating grenades also is desired for use in night fighting.

REMAINDER OF MEXICAN MEMORANDUM.

The second section of the Mexican memorandum, the first of which was made public yesterday, is as follows:

"The constitutionalist government does not wish bandits to go unpunished, nor does it refuse to destroy and disperse them. But the government can tolerate in no manner the continued presence on Mexican territory of American troops who have no excuse for being there.

"The recent attack of bandits on Glenn Springs can in no way be charged to the constitutionalist government, but to the carelessness of the United States, which did not effectively protect the frontier despite warning of danger. It is also very doubtful whether the band was organized in Mexico, as there is good reason for belief that it was assembled on American territory.

"It is proven that General Obregon, during his interview with Generals Scott and Funston at Juarez, notified them that the Mexican government would not permit the passage of American troops into Mexican territory and that orders had been given to the commanders of all frontier points to refuse consent to the passage of American troops.

ACCUSES FUNSTON OF BAD FAITH.

"When General Obregon showed Generals Funston and Scott a copy of a paper published in El Paso stating that American troops had entered Mexican territory as the result of the affairs at Glenn Springs and Boquillas, General Funston replied:

"'I have given no such order, nor have I any information of any such movement.'

"Between men of honor General Funston's reply can only be considered as a positive denial that American troops had passed the border. The department of state alleges that the declaration of Funston was made before the order was issued and not after it had gone into effect. Nevertheless, it appears the truth that General Funston attempted to hide some movement of troops which he had already considered ordering when he said that he had not given the order.

"It is not true that Generals Scott and Funston, through their conference with General Obregon, mentioned the possibility of a new punitive expedition across the frontier into the state of Tamaulipas on account of the activities imputed to De la Rosa.

SAY U. S. IS "OBSTRUCTING."

"All the charges made against the United States concerning obstacles placed in the way of effecting the pacification of Mexico remain, since the department of state does not refute the imputations made against it. On the contrary, it admits the charges so far as they pertain to the embargo on arms and munitions into Mexico. It is a mere excuse to say that this embargo was ordered by the president of the United States to prevent arms and ammunition falling into the hands of Villa, since it is well known that the constitutionalist government has taken possession of all the frontier since the first of the present year.

"It is true that the whole press of Mexico is friendly to the constitutionalist government, but the latter does not consider that it has the right to check writers and prevent them from the free expression of their oppinion. On the other hand, the American press, although the note gives it to be understod that the government exercises no censorship over it, is controlled in political matters and it is well known that the Mexican press has never attempted to treat the relations between Mexico and the United States in a spirit so hostile as is shown by the American press.

"The attitude of the first chief of the constitutionalist government is clearly defined in his message of March 12, in which he urged the Mexican people to be prepared for any emergency which might arise because of the difficulties between the United States and Mexico.

"It is mere evasion in the note of the department to say that the United States has been unable to permit the transportation of munitions of war across the frontier, lest they might fall into the hands of the enemies of law and order. The fact is that the government of the United States has undertaken to prevent the constitutionalist government from acquiring the arms which every nation needs to preserve order within its territory.

HUERTA ARREST CAME "THROUGH FEAR."

"It is true that the United States ordered the arrest of Huerta, but this was more on account of fear of his intrigues with Germany than for the purpose of aiding the constitutionalist government.

"It is also true that there are in the United States many criminals and fugitives from Mexico who conspire freely against the constitutionalist government and the Mexican people.

"It is not true that the American troops undertook the instant pursuit of Villa, since it has been shown by documents that the pursuit did not begin until the lapse of six days. Nor is it true that the promises of the American government through the medium of the president, the department of state and other authorities have crystalized into facts since, after Villa's bands had been completely dispersed and destroyed, there is no longer any justification for American troops remaining on Mexican territory and they should now leave.

"The constitutionalist government has had a perfect right to demand of the United States the immediate retirement of American troops from the national territory on the completion of the mission which could be the only reason for their crossing the frontier.

"It is not true that the presence of American troops in Mexico is the only check on further attacks of bandits and is the best means of protecting the lives and property of American citizens settled in our country. On the contrary, the continued presence of these troops has been the cause of recent new raids by enemies of the constitutionalist govrnment who wish to provoke international difficulties.

MEXICO WILL "TRY TO PUNISH BANDITS."

"The admission of the secretary of state that the United States lacks sufficient forces to protect the whole length of the Mexican border is very important. This one consideration ought to cause the United States to be less exacting with the constitutionalist government in this particular. If the United States will confine itself to keeping order on its frontier, it will immediately remove all the difficulties which now exist between the two countries.

"The government of Mexico desires to stop every raid of bandits on Mexican territory and to punish them by implacable pursuit within its own territory. But if these raids cannot be avoided the Mexican government does not consider that its responsibility extends beyond paying for the resulting damages.

"The constitutionalist government does not ignore its obligations to give protection to lives and property within the Mexican territory, but short of a well defined agreement will not permit a foreign nation to enter Mexican territory with its armed forces. If the government of the United States has not the right to give protection to its own citizens in territory which does not belong to it, the department of state should finally observe that no right pertains to the United States to continue to maintain its puntive expedition in Mexico."

Eleven Glasses Has Some Kick

Chicago, July 1.—Eleven glasses of whiskey in a row on the bar of David Brelliant, on the night of June 20, were negotiated consecutively by Walter Ganozek as the result of a bet that the latter had made with his son-in-law. Many Bushels of Grain Exported from Galveston

Galveston, Tex., July 1.—Exports of grain through Galveston for the year ending June 30 amounted to 30,974,737 bushels, according to figures made public today. Of this amount wheat shipments composed 28,989,883 bushels and corn, kaffir corn and oats made up the remainder. Foreign ports taking one million or more bushels were Barcelona, Genoa, Liverpool, London, Manchester, Marseilles, Naples, Pieraeus and Rotterdam.

Shipments to Rotterdam amounted to 4,672,000 bushels and much of this grain was for the Belgian relief commission.

The exports for the year are about 20,000,000 bushels short of the record for the twelve months ending June 30, 1916.

KITCHIN INTRODUCES NEW REVENUE BILL

Washington, July 1.—Creation of a non-partisan tariff commission of six members with broad inquisition powers is proposed in the general revenue bill introduced today by Democratic Leader Kitchin of the house.

The bill, the fruit of many conferences of democratic members of the ways and means committee and discussions with administration officials, contemplates raising $210,000,000 and $225,000,000 of additional revenue by reclassification of the surtax on incomes, a tax on estates and on war munitions plants. The bill will be rushed through the house under a special rule for a vote next Saturday night.

The income tax section of the bill increases the normal tax on every individual and corporation to 2 per cent instead of the present 1 per cent; does not lower the $3000-$4000 minimum exemption limit but reclassifies and gradually increases the surtax from 1 per cent on incomes of $20,000-$40,000 to 10 per cent on all above $500,000.

The administrative provisions follow generally those of the existing law. The new rates are applicable to the present year.

Orpet Case Hinges on Whether Cyanide Was in Solution

Chicago, July 1.—The apparently powerful evidence of the three white spots alleged to have been left on the overcoat of Marian Lambert by cyanide of potassium in solution was the subject of attack at the trial of William H. Orpet, college student, charged with her murder, today.

It was said by a member of the defense forces that a number of surprises on this point are in store for the state and that the most startling of these will come from the witness stand when court, which adjourned over the Fourth of July, is called in session next week.

New Trial Refused Mrs. Harrison

Fort Worth, Tex., July 1.—Mrs. Katherine Vance Harrison, found guilty Wednesday on a charge of murdering W. L. Warren and sentenced to a penal term of five years, was denied a new trial in district court here today. The principal ground on which the new trial was asked was that one of the jurors who convicted Mrs. Harrison had served a term in federal prison for sending obscene matter through the mail and that he had never been pardoned. It was claimed that this dissualified him. The court ruled that the offense for which the juror had been sent to the penitentiary was not a felony and therefore the juror had not been deprived of his citizenship.

CAMP SITE BEING PREPARED FOR TROOPS

FIRST VERMONT INFANTRY WILL ARRIVE ON BORDER VERY SOON.

Many Men at Work in Providing a Water Supply—Railroad Communication Still Open.

Eagle Pass, July 1.—The First Vermont infantry is expected to arrive here sometime within the next twenty-four hours. The camp site for the regiment already has been prepared. Two hundred men were employed today in providing for a water supply for the camp, which will be occupied by the two Kansas regiments which are expected here in the near future. The two Maryland regiments which will be stationed at Eagle Pass also are expected to arrive shortly, but the exact date of arrival is withheld by military authorities here.

Although military officers decline to discuss troop movements, it is reported from local sources that two more batteries of the Third field artillery are expected to reach here early next week.

Railroad communication btween Piedras Negras and Eagle Pass and the interior of Mexico is still open. Two Americans who came to the border some time ago expected to return to Monclova late tonight. General Francisco Murgia, commanding the Mexican troops in Coahuila, was reported today to be in Monclova.

A Mexican engineer, switching cars on the Piedras Negras side of the river tonight shoved several freight cars onto the international bridge. The rails had been removed from the bridge soem time ago by the Mexicans, so the cars overturned, blocking the structure.

HOLLAND PREPARED FOR HARD FIGHTING

The Hague, Netherlands. — (Correspondence of the Associated Press.)—Interesting information as to what has been accomplished in preparing the Dutch army for modern warfare in the twenty-one months during which it has now been on a war footing, was contained in a statement presented to parliament by the minister of war, Major General N. Bosboom, when he asked for a fresh appropriation of $40,000,000 to cover mobilization expenses.

Even a partial demobilization is still out of the question, according to the war minister.

Answering the question whether the Dutch army was adequately prepared for war and whether the material and equipment fulfill modern requirements, he said that although it was inadvisable to make public information which might benefit a possible enemy, there was no doubt the Dutch soldiers could face the prospect of war with confidence.

In August, 1914, the material and equipment left much to be desired. The workshops of the kingdom were not ready for mass production. These shops have been enlarged and a hundred factories have been equipped for the production of war material. There is a great supply of hand grenades, in the use of which the troops have been trained. Gas masks, steel helmits, modern engineering material, trench shields, barbed wire, and protectvie material have been made in large quantities.

Searchlights for coast defense, land positions, and field troops have been increased. Automobile stations for wireless telegraphy have been formed. The army has at its disposal a great number of motor lorries for the transport of troops and wounded. The number of aeroplanes has been largely increased. These are provided with bombs, machine guns and quick-firers and, as regards speed and raising power, they have been brought up to the standard prevailing abroda. Private industry has co-operated in the building of new aeroplanes, although Holland remains dependent on foreign countries for motors.

As regards the medical service, the reserve hospital accommodation has been increased by arrangements with 150 civilian nursing institutions. Moreover, an institute of military dentists has been established. Vaccination against smallpox, typhus and meningitis is being carried out.

An unfavorable comment on the relations between commanders and men in the Dutch army is the fact, now made known, that many thousands of soldiers persisted in going on furlough at Easter, when leave was refused them, owing to the special circumstances that made the position dangerous for Holland. Severe punishment has been meted out to the men concerned. Incidentally, the minister mentioned that there were fifty-two suicides in the army at the beginning of mobilization.

No special announcement is made regarding the number of trained men which the country now possesses, but former Minister of War Mr. H. Colyn says the total has increased to some 370,000 and that if all the further available Landstorm are trained there will be a force of 650,000 men available.

PASSENGERS BRING STORY OF A BATTLE

Galveston, July 1.—With seventy-nine passengers, of whom but forty are listed on the ship's passenger manifest, the Wolvin line steamship Dade arrived here today.

The passengers brought a story of a brief clash between American sailors and Carranza soldiers at Tampico last Tuesday.

According to the passengers, the sailors were from the cruiser Salem and were making soundings in the harbor when they were fired on by Carranza troops. Two of them were injured. The Americans returned the fire and retired to the Salem. Captain Scott of the American gunboat Marietta in the harbor demanded an explanation of General Nafarrate. The general replied that he could not read English, returning the note. A new demand was not sent, it was said. The gunboats Marietta and Machias are lying at Tampico, stripped for action, the refugees say.

The party reported Vera Cruz to be very quiet. About 350 Americans are being cared for there on the battleship Nebraska.

the $182,000,000 measure passed by the house will reach a total of more than $300,000,000 when reported to the senate.

Among items added today were $13,000,000 for the army aviation service, $1,545,490 for the signal corps, $12,200,000 for national guard field artillery and ammunition, $4,586,000 for machine guns, $1,000,000 for armored motor cars and $5,000,000 for ordnance stores.

In the house the appropriations committee faced another angle of the Mexican trouble. Secretary Lansing called for an additional $300,000 to get Americans out of Mexico.

"The conditions are such at the present time," the secretary said in a memorandum which accompanied the estimate, "that in my opinion it is highly desirable that every American citizen should leave Mexico at the earliest possible moment."

From Secretary Baker came hurry estimates of $1,643,500 to meet emergencies on the border. The money is needed to buy equipment for the national guard, ranging from machine guns to engineering implements.

A supply of illuminating grenades also is desired for use in night fighting.

REMAINDER OF MEXICAN MEMORANDUM.

The second section of the Mexican memorandum, the first of which was made public yesterday, is as follows:

"The constitutionalist government does not wish bandits to go unpunished, nor does it refuse to destroy and disperse them. But the government can tolerate in no manner the continued presence on Mexican territory of American troops who have no excuse for being there.

"The recent attack of bandits on Glenn Springs can in no way be charged to the constitutionalist government, but to the carelessness of the United States, which did not effectively protect the frontier despite warning of danger. It is also very doubtful whether the band was organized in Mexico, as there is good reason for belief that it was assembled on American territory.

"It is proven that General Obregon, during his interview with Generals Scott and Funston at Juarez, notified them that the Mexican government would not permit the passage of American troops into Mexican territory and that orders had been given to the commanders of all frontier points to refuse consent to the passage of American troops.

ACCUSES FUNSTON OF BAD FAITH.

"When General Obregon showed Generals Funston and Scott a copy of a paper published in El Paso stating that American troops had entered Mexican territory as the result of the affairs at Glenn Springs and Boquillas, General Funston replied:

"'I have given no such order, nor have I any information of any such movement.'

"Between men of honor General Funston's reply can only be considered as a positive denial that American troops had passed the border. The department of state alleges that the declaration of Funston was made before the order was issued and not after it had gone into effect. Nevertheless, it appears the truth that General Funston attempted to hide some movement of troops which he had already considered ordering when he said that he had not given the order.

"It is not true that Generals Scott and Funston, through their conference with General Obregon, mentioned the possibility of a new punitive expedition across the frontier into the state of Tamaulipas on account of the activities imputed to De la Rosa.

SAY U. S. IS "OBSTRUCTING."

"All the charges made against the United States concerning obstacles placed in the way of effecting the pacification of Mexico remain, since the department of state does not refute the imputations made against it. On the contrary, it admits the charges so far as they pertain to the embargo on arms and munitions into Mexico. It is a mere excuse to say that this embargo was ordered by the president of the United States to prevent arms and ammunition falling into the hands of Villa, since it is well known that the constitutionalist government has taken possession of all the frontier since the first of the present year.

"It is true that the whole press of Mexico is friendly to the constitutionalist government, but the latter does not consider that it has the right to check writers and prevent them from the free expression of their oppinion. On the other hand, the American press, although the note gives it to be understod that the government exercises no censorship over it, is controlled in political matters and it is well known that the Mexican press has never attempted to treat the relations between Mexico and the United States in a spirit so hostile as is shown by the American press.

"The attitude of the first chief of the constitutionalist government is clearly defined in his message of March 12, in which he urged the Mexican people to be prepared for any emergency which might arise because of the difficulties between the United States and Mexico.

"It is mere evasion in the note of the department to say that the United States has been unable to permit the transportation of munitions of war across the frontier, lest they might fall into the hands of the enemies of law and order. The fact is that the government of the United States has undertaken to prevent the constitutionalist government from acquiring the arms which every nation needs to preserve order within its territory.

HUERTA ARREST CAME "THROUGH FEAR."

"It is true that the United States ordered the arrest of Huerta, but this was more on account of fear of his intrigues with Germany than for the purpose of aiding the constitutionalist government.

"It is also true that there are in the United States many criminals and fugitives from Mexico who conspire freely against the constitutionalist government and the Mexican people.

"It is not true that the American troops undertook the instant pursuit of Villa, since it has been shown by documents that the pursuit did not begin until the lapse of six days. Nor is it true that the promises of the American government through the medium of the president, the department of state and other authorities have crystalized into facts since, after Villa's bands had been completely dispersed and destroyed, there is no longer any justification for American troops remaining on Mexican territory and they should now leave.

"The constitutionalist government has had a perfect right to demand of the United States the immediate retirement of American troops from the national territory on the completion of the mission which could be the only reason for their crossing the frontier.

"It is not true that the presence of American troops in Mexico is the only check on further attacks of bandits and is the best means of protecting the lives and property of American citizens settled in our country. On the contrary, the continued presence of these troops has been the cause of recent new raids by enemies of the constitutionalist govrnment who wish to provoke international difficulties.

MEXICO WILL "TRY TO PUNISH BANDITS."

"The admission of the secretary of state that the United States lacks sufficient forces to protect the whole length of the Mexican border is very important. This one consideration ought to cause the United States to be less exacting with the constitutionalist government in this particular. If the United States will confine itself to keeping order on its frontier, it will immediately remove all the difficulties which now exist between the two countries.

"The government of Mexico desires to stop every raid of bandits on Mexican territory and to punish them by implacable pursuit within its own territory. But if these raids cannot be avoided the Mexican government does not consider that its responsibility extends beyond paying for the resulting damages.

"The constitutionalist government does not ignore its obligations to give protection to lives and property within the Mexican territory, but short of a well defined agreement will not permit a foreign nation to enter Mexican territory with its armed forces. If the government of the United States has not the right to give protection to its own citizens in territory which does not belong to it, the department of state should finally observe that no right pertains to the United States to continue to maintain its puntive expedition in Mexico."

Eleven Glasses Has Some Kick

Chicago, July 1.—Eleven glasses of whiskey in a row on the bar of David Breliant, on the night of June 20, were negotiated consecutively by Walter Ganozek as the result of a bet that the latter had made with his son-in-law. Many Bushels of Grain Exported from Galveston

Galveston, Tex., July 1.—Exports of grain through Galveston for the year ending June 30 amounted to 30,974,737 bushels, according to figures made public today. Of this amount wheat shipments composed 28,989,883 bushels and corn, kaffir corn and oats made up the remainder. Foreign ports taking one million or more bushels were Barcelona, Genoa, Liverpool, London, Manchester, Marseilles, Naples, Pieraeus and Rotterdam.

Shipments to Rotterdam amounted to 4,672,000 bushels and much of this grain was for the Belgian relief commission.

The exports for the year are about 20,000,000 bushels short of the record for the twelve months ending June 30, 1916.

KITCHIN INTRODUCES NEW REVENUE BILL

Washington, July 1.—Creation of a non-partisan tariff commission of six members with broad inquisition powers is proposed in the general revenue bill introduced today by Democratic Leader Kitchin of the house.

The bill, the fruit of many conferences of democratic members of the ways and means committee and discussions with administration officials, contemplates raising $210,000,000 and $225,000,000 of additional revenue by reclassification of the surtax on incomes, a tax on estates and on war munitions plants. Twelve hundred members of the Red Cross society of Waco were reported as the total membership up to last night by the team captains of the local chapter and the number is daily growing through the enthusiastic campaign that is being waged. The team that is headed by L. R. Richards and William Mead was the star of the campaign, according to the totals last night, with 315 members secured, and Mrs. Leslie Stegall led the individual campaigners for the day with fifty new members to her credit.

President W. W. Seley and Campaign Chairman W. P. Witsell were both very happy over the results obtained. Detail work incident to the campaign is being handled by the chapter secretary, Charles P. Link. Tomorrow division lines will be disregarded and the campaigners will have free reign in their solicitations.

The definite work in the way of refreshing the tired soldiers aboard the troop trains that pass through Waco has proved a stimulation to the work and an indication of the practical service which is now being rendered by the chapter.

"Cyclone" Davis Is Criticized for His Mexican Attitude

Washington, July 1.—The American Union Against Militarism gave out today a copy of a letter addressed to Congressman "Cyclone" Davis of Texas by one of his constituents, G. B. Foster of Dallas, in which the Texas statesman is taken vigorously to task for his recent demand for intervention in Mexico. The union is strongly opposed to intervention south of the Rio Grande and apparently fully endorses the sentiments in the letter to which it gave publicity though it made no comment on the same. The letter was as follows:

I regret to note from the papers that you have an attack of "Americanism," and I wish you a speedy recovery. If you were innoculated with a love for justice you might be immune from such a dreadful malady. A better protection still would be a thorough understanding of ethics and economics. I would recommend for you in your distress an hour each day with Louis F. Post's "The Ethics of Democracy" and Henry George's "Protection or Free Trade."

There is no excuse for any trouble with Mexico. The Mexicans are suffering with the same disease the Americans are, only they call it Mexicanism down there and it is Americanism this side of the Rio Grande. Its symptoms are marching up and down the street with bands a playing and colors flying and shouting "My country, right or wrong," when most likely it is wrong.

The border is suffering with "Americanism" complicated with preparedness. Why trail one lone half breed bandit with guns big enough to blow up Gibraltar? Why an army to run down one little criminal? Why an armed force on the soil of a neighboring republic?

I had thought better of you than your statement to the papers for intervention. This is to serve notice that I now recall my pledge of vote and support in your race for congress. I am of the conclusion that you cannot do the cause of justice much service since the cause needs strong men. My disappointment is more than I can express.

The American Union recently sent a long telegram to President Wilson in which it declared its conviction that a war with Mexico growing out of the continued presence of our troops there would be a "national humiliation."

Driverless Car Collides,

Scooting along Elm street without driver or occupants, a maverick auto jammed into the wagon of G. Epenstein last night and threw him to the ground, bruising him about the face. The collision stopped the auto, and Epenstein says two boys got in the car and drove off hurriedly. He could give no explanation fo rthe car's antics.

Miss Newton to Take Charge G.-M. Beauty Parlor Again

Miss Fannie E. Newton, hair and skin specialist, will again have charge of the beauty parlors on the second floor of the Goldstein-Migel company's big store. Miss Newton has been away for a number of months making a close study of skin and hair diseases, complexion treatment and gaining a scientific knowledge of all harmless methods in the beautifying of hand, neck, face and advanced ideas in head treatment. The Goldstein-Migel beauty parlors have been fitted up with the latest up-to-date appliances to promote the work of this department in a thorough, efficient manner, and under the leadership of Miss Newton, with a trained corps of assistants, the women of Waco and Central Texas are assured of a beauty parlor second to none anywhere.

It is gratifying to see this improvement along the lines of service in the big Goldstein-Migel store, and is another proof that Waco is forging ahead in the city class.

Miss Newton asks all her old friends and customers to visit her and she will be pleased to demonstrate all of the new advanced methods in harmless beautifying and correct face treatment that she has acquired during her absence.

Wyoming Man Buys Refrigerator After Seeing Ad in News

Showing the carrying power of an advertisement of a good article is some correspondence in the files of Walkup Brothers, a Waco concern that manufactures iceless refrigerators. It is the story of a sale of one of the economical and satisfactory refrigerating articles manufactured by this company.

The order was placed by Wilder Anthony of the Rapid Creek ranch, Sheridan, Wyo., after having seen the advertisement of Walkup Brothers in the Morning News in Wyoming. After dropping a card asking for information, Mr. Anthony ordered one of the refrigerators. The third communication received was an acknowledgment of receipt of the machine and a statement of his appreciation of the satisfaction he had gotten from it.

STATE BAR ASSOCIATION TO MEET AT GALVESTON

WILL HAVE GRAND BANQUET AT HOTEL GALVEZ ON EVENING OF FOURTH OF JULY.

Chief Justice Nelson Phillips Will Be One of the Main Speakers for Meeting.

Galveston will be host to some of the brightest legal talent in Texas on July 4, when the Texas Bar association holds its annual meeting there. Chief Justice Nelson Phillips will be one of the speakers for the occasion and the program includes a banquet and a number of the outing features for which the Island City is famous. Waco is expected to be well represented by members of the local bar.

Indicating the plans that are being made for the meeting, the following letter has been written to Allan D. Sanford of this city by Frank C. Jones of Houston, vice president of the association:

"Hon. Cecil H. Smith, one of the directors of the Texas Bar association, which meets in Galveston July 3 and 4, has been selected to get up toast list for the banquet at the Galvez hotel on the night of July 4, and I take pleasure in herewith enclosing you a copy of the banquet program.

Mr. Smith is eminently qualified for such a role and a banquet with him in charge will be a treat. You can see that Hon. John L. Dyer of El Paso, the president, is toastmaster, and that the toast list is very attractive, indeed, embracing some of the best speakers in the state, and men ranking high in the legal profession. The banquet is free to all members of the association, being tendered by the bar of Galveston.

During the day of July 4, Chief Justice Nelson Phillips of our supreme court, will address not only the bar association, but the public of Galveston, delivering his Fourth of July oration at 11 o'clock a. m., at the Galvez hotel, by special request of the citizens of Galveston.

On Monday evening at 5 o'clock there will be a large ride tendered by members of the association, followed by a bathing party, with dancing at the Galvez that evening. The entertainment is in charge of a committee of the Galveston bar, headed by the Hon. H. Clay Briggs, district judge of that city. The address of welcome in behalf of the Galveston bar will be delivered by Hon. Marsene Johnson, president of the Galveston Bar association. Hon. Cecil H. Smith of Sherman will deliver the response for the association. These have been selected by Hon. C. K. Lee, chairman of the board of directors of Fort Worth.

Following is the program for the banquet at the Galvez on July 4:

BELL TELEPHONE MEN WILL GET FULL PAY

SOUTHWESTERN EMPLOYES IN NATIONAL GUARD TO ALSO RECEIVE SALARIES.

Upon Return from Front, Jobs Will Still Be Found, Promises the Company.

Dallas, July 1.—Men of the Bell telephone organization of Texas who were members of the Texas National Guard and responded to the call which took them afield on June 18, 1916, will receive full pay from the Southwestern Telegraph and Telephone company for three months after joining the colors, and for nine months thereafter, the difference between what they receive from the government and the amount of their salary at the time they donned the uniform for active service. Those dependent upon them will not undergo privation. At the same time, these "telephone soldiers" will, upon return from duty or honorable discharge, be given such employment as the needs of the service will permit and they are able and fitted to perform when they return to civil life.

The necessity for maintaining telephone service, especially along the border, in times of such particular stress, is so great that every effort must be made to avoid crippling it.

This decision has been conveyed to all male employes in a personal letter as signed by General Manager C. A. Gates. It has also gone forward to those now in military service. This letter indicates the high patriotic appreciation of those who direct the affairs of this great company, for their obligation to the nation. It follows:

"The Southwestern Telegraph and Telephone Company.

"Dallas, Texas, June 29, 1916.

"Dear Sir: For your information, I desire to advise you the company's position toward its employes who were members of the National Guard at the time of the president's call, or who may enlist hereafter with the company's approval, in regard to salaries of such employes and their status under the employes' benefit fund.

"The Southwestern Telegraph and Telephone company has agreed that employes who, on the 18th of June, 1916, were members of the National Guard or naval militia, and who have been called into service by orders issued in accordance with the proclamation, of that date, of the president of the United States or who may be called into service by similar order, will be allowed full pay at the normal rate in effect on that date, in each case during absence in such service, not to exceed three full months and the fraction of the month in which called into service, and thereafter for a period not exceeding nine additional months, full pay at such rates less the amount in each case paid by the government.

"Such employes will also be considered in computing term of service for the purposes of the employes' benefit plan as having been continuously employed by the company while absent on such duty, and upon return from such duty, or after honorable discharge, will be given such employment as needs of the service will permit, and the employes are able and fitted to perform. Owing to the importance of our service to the government and the public in time of war, we must take care not to cripple it.

"Therefore, the names of those who are willing to enlist hereafter will be noted, and if subsequently desired by the government, we will aid in supplying skilled men for the particular service for which men specially trained are required.

"Those who hereafter enlist, with the company's approval, will be treated in the same manner as employes who were members of the National Guard or naval militia on June 18, 1916.

"Every consideration in due time will be given to the matter of service beyond the period herein provided for.

"In case the state or nation makes provisions for dependents of the men in service or the situation is otherwise substantially changed, this arrangement may be modified as in the judgment of the company the changed conditions may warrant.

"Yours truly,

"C. A. GATES, Gen. Mgr."

KING CANDY COMPANY PARTY RECEIVES A ROYAL WELCOME

King Candy company employes, salesmen, friends and boosters, of Fort Worth, reached Waco yesterday morning on their trip from Fort Worth to Galveston, and were given a right royal welcome here. They reached Waco at 10:22 o'clock and made things happen while they were here.

They lined up in twos at the passenger station at Fourth and Mary streets and marched up Fourth to Austin and up Austin to the Raleigh hotel; they then went down Eighth to the Katy depot, where their train had been parked.

The delegation was met by a special committee from the Y. M. B. L., composed of Chairman L. E. Bain, John Wright, T. H. Williams, E. C. Blomeyer, W. W. Naman and Perry A. Duncan. This committee had provided for the coming of the visitors, and had a large number of autos at the passenger station when they arrived. Several fire engines were on hand and with the sirens of the city screeched out a shrill and boisterous welcome. Many citizens were present, and the parade was led by Waco police.

The entire force of "King men and women" appeared on the train, it is stated. First in the line of march was Fort Worth Chief of Police George Black and uniformed Officers Lightfoot and Davis on horseback; then came the celebrated King band; next were the King employes, and the wake was made up of citizens of Waco and the ladies of the visiting Fort Worth people in autos. There were a number of appropriate banners in the parade.

G. A. Godfrey of Fort Worth is general chairman of the entire trip and has charge of the train and all arrangements, likewise of all committees. H. R. Grant is the grand marshal of the forces and had everything well in hand. The schedule and itinerary of the first day out included one-minute stops at smaller points along the line. A stop of an hour and fifteen minutes was made at Temple, where dinner was enjoyed.

A great program has been arranged at Galveston, which will include many different features of entertainment, and Sunday night at 11 o'clock the special train will start back to Fort Worth. On reaching that city a monster parade will be pulled off, this ending at the chamber of commerce rooms, where the party will disband.

Mart Gas Company Buys Two Wells

Mart, July 1.—The new gas company of Mart, chartered "Mart Pipe Line Company," and reported in these columns a week ago, is a husky youngster, for it has already brought in two gas wells near Groesbeck and contracted with J. T. Leach, an expert gas man of Mexia, to lay the pipe from the wells to our city, and has unloaded one car of pipe at Groesbeck and has four cars on the road to Mart. The pipe line has been surveyed and right of way nearly completed. The hustling executive committee that has accomplished so much in so short a time is led by J. Lee Harman, chairman, and general manager, backed by W. T. Shelton and C. A. Meroney.

The I & G. N. employes' annual picnic yesterday is reported to have been a big success by hundreds who participated. W. K. Sadler, T. J. Yeargin and J. T. Sansom composed the committee to stage the event. They chartered the whole train, so they did not need an auditor. Tom Steed handled the engine, with C. E. Russell as right-hand man. Dave Lloyd was conductor, Tommie Jenkins and M. R. Chadwell brakemen. The picnickers especially praise the Katy management for giving free use of its track and furnishing a pilot out to the grounds, Days lake. They were entertained by the Mart band, two ball games and lots of good things to eat.

Boy Cuts Another Lad.

Dick Bryant, aged 18, was painfully cut last night by Cecil Green, aged 15. The fracas grew out of a boyish difference some two weeks ago. The assistant probation officer took Green in charge.

MONEY TO LOAN TO BUILD HOMES

This company now offers loans on improved Waco residence property, and having operated throughout Texas for over 25 years, has assisted thousands in securing their own homes. The loans of this company are with a few exceptions, made on homes, either to build or to remove existing incumbrances. Many who have transferred their mortgages into this company find that they are now paying principle and interest as easily as they have heretofore paid the interest alone. The reason is plain: The payments are always the same and are due at fixed intervals. Every mortgage made by this company contains a clause providing for its discharge after a fixed number of payments have been made, unless sooner discharged through maturity. The mortgagor has the option to pay off his mortgage in full, or in part, at any time without having to pay any unearned interest. A loan from this company has to be adjusted but once. There is no annual uneasiness. Each month takes care of itself. The burden is easily distributed throughout the whole time. There is absolutely no delay in furnishing a loan through this company.

Uneeda Preparedness Window Striking at Gray and Smith's

There have been display windows and display windows with the preparedness motif since the world has plunged into war, but up at the Gray & Smith Grocery company, near Eighth and Austin, there is a Uneeda window that is worked out to a pretty effect. The idea is a small army of the famous Uneeda boys, fully equipped with miniature rifles, preparing to enter their Uneeda fort. The battalion is in marching array with a full command of officers. The marchers are acting as guard to two midget motor trucks, filled with supplies, and there is a representation of one of the late motor armored fighting machines. Details of the preparedness scheme are worked out with an artistic hand. Small cannons jut out from the portholes in the fort made of Uneeda cracker boxes and small American flags are very much in evidence. It is a sight well worth seeing and it is attracting much attention to the up-to-dateness and appealing grocery display front of Gray & Smith.

"Cyclone" Davis Is Criticized for His Mexican Attitude

Washington, July 1.—The American Union Against Militarism gave out today a copy of a letter addressed to Congressman "Cyclone" Davis of Texas by one of his constituents, G. B. Foster of Dallas, in which the Texas statesman is taken vigorously to task for his recent demand for intervention in Mexico. The union is strongly opposed to intervention south of the Rio Grande and apparently fully endorses the sentiments in the letter to which it gave publicity though it made no comment on the same. The letter was as follows:

I regret to note from the papers that you have an attack of "Americanism," and I wish you a speedy recovery. If you were innoculated with a love for justice you might be immune from such a dreadful malady. A better protection still would be a thorough understanding of ethics and economics. I would recommend for you in your distress an hour each day with Louis F. Post's "The Ethics of Democracy" and Henry George's "Protection or Free Trade."

There is no excuse for any trouble with Mexico. The Mexicans are suffering with the same disease the Americans are, only they call it Mexicanism down there and it is Americanism this side of the Rio Grande. Its symptoms are marching up and down the street with bands a playing and colors flying and shouting "My country, right or wrong," when most likely it is wrong.

The border is suffering with "Americanism" complicated with preparedness. Why trail one lone half breed bandit with guns big enough to blow up Gibraltar? Why an army to run down one little criminal? Why an armed force on the soil of a neighboring republic?

I had thought better of you than your statement to the papers for intervention. This is to serve notice that I now recall my pledge of vote and support in your race for congress. I am of the conclusion that you cannot do the cause of justice much service since the cause needs strong men. My disappointment is more than I can express.

The American Union recently sent a long telegram to President Wilson in which it declared its conviction that a war with Mexico growing out of the continued presence of our troops there would be a "national humiliation."

Driverless Car Collides.

Scooting along Elm street without driver or occupants, a maverick auto jammed into the wagon of G. Epenstein last night and threw him to the ground, bruising him about the face. The collision stopped the auto, and Epenstein says two boys got in the car and drove off hurriedly. He could give no explanation fo rthe car's antics.

Miss Newton to Take Charge G.-M. Beauty Parlor Again

Miss Fannie E. Newton, hair and skin specialist, will again have charge of the beauty parlors on the second floor of the Goldstein-Migel company's big store. Miss Newton has been away for a number of months making a close study of skin and hair diseases, complexion treatment and gaining a scientific knowledge of all harmless methods in the beautifying of hand, neck, face and advanced ideas in head treatment. The Goldstein-Migel beauty parlors have been fitted up with the latest up-to-date appliances to promote the work of this department in a thorough, efficient manner, and under the leadership of Miss Newton, with a trained corps of assistants, the women of Waco and Central Texas are assured of a beauty parlor second to none anywhere.

Wyoming Man Buys Refrigerator After Seeing Ad in News

Showing the carrying power of an advertisement of a good article is some correspondence in the files of Walkup Brothers, a Waco concern that manufactures iceless refrigerators. It is the story of a sale of one of the economical and satisfactory refrigerating articles manufactured by this company.

The order was placed by Wilder Anthony of the Rapid Creek ranch, Sheridan, Wyo., after having seen the advertisement of Walkup Brothers in the Morning News in Wyoming. After dropping a card asking for information, Mr. Anthony ordered one of the refrigerators. The third communication received was an acknowledgment of receipt of the machine and a statement of his appreciation of the satisfaction he had gotten from it.

STATE BAR ASSOCIATION TO MEET AT GALVESTON

WILL HAVE GRAND BANQUET AT HOTEL GALVEZ ON EVENING OF FOURTH OF JULY.

Chief Justice Nelson Phillips Will Be One of the Main Speakers for Meeting.

Galveston will be host to some of the brightest legal talent in Texas on July 4, when the Texas Bar association holds its annual meeting there. Chief Justice Nelson Phillips will be one of the speakers for the occasion and the program includes a banquet and a number of the outing features for which the Island City is famous. Waco is expected to be well represented by members of the local bar.

Indicating the plans that are being made for the meeting, the following letter has been written to Allan D. Sanford of this city by Frank C. Jones of Houston, vice president of the association:

"Hon. Cecil H. Smith, one of the directors of the Texas Bar association, which meets in Galveston July 3 and 4, has been selected to get up toast list for the banquet at the Galvez hotel on the night of July 4, and I take pleasure in herewith enclosing you a copy of the banquet program.

Mr. Smith is eminently qualified for such a role and a banquet with him in charge will be a treat. You can see that Hon. John L. Dyer of El Paso, the president, is toastmaster, and that the toast list is very attractive, indeed, embracing some of the best speakers in the state, and men ranking high in the legal profession. The banquet is free to all members of the association, being tendered by the bar of Galveston.

During the day of July 4, Chief Justice Nelson Phillips of our supreme court, will address not only the bar association, but the public of Galveston, delivering his Fourth of July oration at 11 o'clock a. m., at the Galvez hotel, by special request of the citizens of Galveston.

On Monday evening at 5 o'clock there will be a large ride tendered by members of the association, followed by a bathing party, with dancing at the Galvez that evening. The entertainment is in charge of a committee of the Galveston bar, headed by the Hon. H. Clay Briggs, district judge of that city. The address of welcome in behalf of the Galveston bar will be delivered by Hon. Marsene Johnson, president of the Galveston Bar association. Hon. Cecil H. Smith of Sherman will deliver the response for the association. These have been selected by Hon. C. K. Lee, chairman of the board of directors of Fort Worth.

Following is the program for the banquet at the Galvez on July 4:

John L. Dyer, toastmaster, El Paso.

BELL TELEPHONE MEN WILL GET FULL PAY

SOUTHWESTERN EMPLOYES IN NATIONAL GUARD TO ALSO RECEIVE SALARIES.

Upon Return from Front, Jobs Will Still Be Found, Promises the Company.

Dallas, July 1.—Men of the Bell telephone organization of Texas who were members of the Texas National Guard and responded to the call which took them afield on June 18, 1916, will receive full pay from the Southwestern Telegraph and Telephone company for three months after joining the colors, and for nine months thereafter, the difference between what they receive from the government and the amount of their salary at the time they donned the uniform for active service. Those dependent upon them will not undergo privation. At the same time, these "telephone soldiers" will, upon return from duty or honorable discharge, be given such employment as the needs of the service will permit and they are able and fitted to perform when they return to civil life.

The necessity for maintaining telephone service, especially along the border, in times of such particular stress, is so great that every effort must be made to avoid crippling it.

This decision has been conveyed to all male employes in a personal letter as signed by General Manager C. A. Gates. It has also gone forward to those now in military service. This letter indicates the high patriotic appreciation of those who direct the affairs of this great company, for their obligation to the nation. It follows:

"The Southwestern Telegraph and Telephone Company.

"Dallas, Texas, June 29, 1916.

"Dear Sir: For your information, I desire to advise you the company's position toward its employes who were members of the National Guard at the time of the president's call, or who may enlist hereafter with the company's approval, in regard to salaries of such employes and their status under the employes' benefit fund.

"The Southwestern Telegraph and Telephone company has agreed that employes who, on the 18th of June, 1916, were members of the National Guard or naval militia, and who have been called into service by orders issued in accordance with the proclamation, of that date, of the president of the United States or who may be called into service by similar order, will be allowed full pay at the normal rate in effect on that date, in each case during absence in such service, not to exceed three full months and the fraction of the month in which called into service, and thereafter for a period not exceeding nine additional months, full pay at such rates less the amount in each case paid by the government.

"Such employes will also be considered in computing term of service for the purposes of the employes' benefit plan as having been continuously employed by the company while absent on such duty, and upon return from such duty, or after honorable discharge, will be given such employment as needs of the service will permit, and the employes are able and fitted to perform. Owing to the importance of our service to the government and the public in time of war, we must take care not to cripple it.

"Therefore, the names of those who are willing to enlist hereafter will be noted, and if subsequently desired by the government, we will aid in supplying skilled men for the particular service for which men specially trained are required.

"Those who hereafter enlist, with the company's approval, will be treated in the same manner as employes who were members of the National Guard or naval militia on June 18, 1916.

"Every consideration in due time will be given to the matter of service beyond the period herein provided for.

"In case the state or nation makes provisions for dependents of the men in service or the situation is otherwise substantially changed, this arrangement may be modified as in the judgment of the company the changed conditions may warrant.

"Yours truly,

"C. A. GATES, Gen. Mgr."

King Candy company employes, salesmen, friends and boosters, of Fort Worth, reached Waco yesterday morning on their trip from Fort Worth to Galveston, and were given a right royal welcome here. They reached Waco at 10:22 o'clock and made things happen while they were here.

They lined up in twos at the passenger station at Fourth and Mary streets and marched up Fourth to Austin and up Austin to the Raleigh hotel; they then went down Eighth to the Katy depot, where their train had been parked.

The delegation was met by a special committee from the Y. M. B. L., composed of Chairman L. E. Bain, John Wright, T. H. Williams, E. C. Blomeyer, W. W. Naman and Perry A. Duncan. This committee had provided for the coming of the visitors, and had a large number of autos at the passenger station when they arrived. Several fire engines were on hand and with the sirens of the city screeched out a shrill and boisterous welcome. Many citizens were present, and the parade was led by Waco police.

The entire force of "King men and women" appeared on the train, it is stated. First in the line of march was Fort Worth Chief of Police George Black and uniformed Officers Lightfoot and Davis on horseback; then came the celebrated King band; next were the King employes, and the wake was made up of citizens of Waco and the ladies of the visiting Fort Worth people in autos. There were a number of appropriate banners in the parade.

G. A. Godfrey of Fort Worth is general chairman of the entire trip and has charge of the train and all arrangements, likewise of all committees. H. R. Grant is the grand marshal of the forces and had everything well in hand. The schedule and itinerary of the first day out included one-minute stops at smaller points along the line. A stop of an hour and fifteen minutes was made at Temple, where dinner was enjoyed.

A great program has been arranged at Galveston, which will include many different features of entertainment, and Sunday night at 11 o'clock the special train will start back to Fort Worth. On reaching that city a monster parade will be pulled off, this ending at the chamber of commerce rooms, where the party will disband.

Mart Gas Company Buys Two Wells

Mart, July 1.—The new gas company of Mart, chartered "Mart Pipe Line Company," and reported in these columns a week ago, is a husky youngster, for it has already brought in two gas wells near Groesbeck and contracted with J. T. Leach, an expert gas man of Mexia, to lay the pipe from the wells to our city, and has unloaded one car of pipe at Groesbeck and has four cars on the road to Mart. The pipe line has been surveyed and right of way nearly completed. The hustling executive committee that has accomplished so much in so short a time is led by J. Lee Harman, chairman, and general manager, backed by W. T. Shelton and C. A. Meroney.

The I & G. N. employes' annual picnic yesterday is reported to have been a big success by hundreds who participated. W. K. Sadler, T. J. Yeargin and J. T. Sansom composed the committee to stage the event. They chartered the whole train, so they did not need an auditor. Tom Steed handled the engine, with C. E. Russell as right-hand man. Dave Lloyd was conductor, Tommie Jenkins and M. R. Chadwell brakemen. The picnickers especially praise the Katy management for giving free use of its track and furnishing a pilot out to the grounds, Days lake. They were entertained by the Mart band, two ball games and lots of good things to eat.

Uneeda Preparedness Window Striking at Gray and Smith's

There have been display windows and display windows with the preparedness motif since the world has plunged into war, but up at the Gray & Smith Grocery company, near Eighth and Austin, there is a Uneeda window that is worked out to a pretty effect. The idea is a small army of the famous Uneeda boys, fully equipped with miniature rifles, preparing to enter their Uneeda fort. The battalion is in marching array with a full command of officers. The marchers are acting as guard to two midget motor trucks, filled with supplies, and there is a representation of one of the late motor armored fighting machines. Details of the preparedness scheme are worked out with an artistic hand. Small cannons jut out from the portholes in the fort made of Uneeda cracker boxes and small American flags are very much in evidence. It is a sight well worth seeing and it is attracting much attention to the up-to-dateness and appealing grocery display front of Gray & Smith.

MONEY TO LOAN TO BUILD HOMES

This company now offers loans on improved Waco residence property, and having operated throughout Texas for over 25 years, has assisted thousands in securing their own homes. The loans of this company are with a few exceptions, made on homes, either to build or to remove existing incumbrances. Many who have transferred their mortgages into this company find that they are now paying principle and interest as easily as they have heretofore paid the interest alone. The reason is plain: The payments are always the same and are due at fixed intervals. Every mortgage made by this company contains a clause providing for its discharge after a fixed number of payments have been made, unless sooner discharged through maturity. The mortgagor has the option to pay off his mortgage in full, or in part, at any time without having to pay any unearned interest. A loan from this company has to be adjusted but once. There is no annual uneasiness. Each month takes care of itself. The burden is easily distributed throughout the whole time. There is absolutely no delay in furnishing a loan through this company.

THE END MAY BE IN SIGHT.

When it was made plain that the allies were gathering their forces for a general onslaught on the central powers, word went out from Berlin that Germany was ready for peace. The reply from London, Paris and Petrograd was that the hour had not struck for peace.

The sequel of these interchanges is found in the reports which are published this morning from every battle front.

England has launched the most formidable offensive she ever has thrown against a foe, and is marching straight ahad against German trenches in the north of France.

Belgium, France, Italy, Serbia and, mightiest of all, Russia, are flinging simultaneously uncounted multitudes against the Teutonic armies. There are, perhaps, more than 8,000,000 soldiers in action today against the armies of the central powers.

Not since time began was ever such a contest waged. The Teutons are fighting with a zeal and stubbornness which have never been equaled, but they are too greatly outnumbered to admit any doubt as to the result. It was forecast in the capture by the British on yesterday of a long line of German trenches, and by advances made everywhere by the allies.

If the drive thus begun is maintained without counter-offensive by the Teutons, the end of the war will soon be in sight.

The federal reserve bank at Dallas has $18,000,000 deposits, against $7,000,000 deposits at the same time last year. Texas, by this token, is more than twice as well off in its pocketbook as it was a year ago. Yet some people cannot understand why prosperity should now be knocking at the door of every wideawake Southern city.

San Antonio invites Colonel Roosevelt to make that a recruiting point for the gathering of his proposed division. A more appropriate location would be in the middle west, where the Colonel would have a chance to round up the bull moose cohorts who were lately disbanded.

Short courses in agriculture will be conducted in sixty Texas communities, under the auspices of the extension service of Agricultural and Mechanical college, during July and August. That ought to furnish good insurance against any irreparable damage in the July primary.

There are plenty of signs of attempted elimination, and still the old line-up stands: Culberson, Colquitt and Henry. Is it possible that the state is to be treated to a coup d'etat, pulled off a day or two before the primary? Keep a sharp lookout, boys. There's something brewing.

THEY WILL SEE TEXAS.

The incidental advertising of Texas as the result of thousands of troops from all over the United States pouring through this state on their way to the border has been referred to by The News. Writing on the same subject in Commerce and Finance, a New York financial journal, Theodore H. Price, the well known economist, says:

"About 100,000 young men, chiefly from the cities of the North and West, will shortly be on their way to the Mexican border. For the most part they will go to Texas. On the way and while they are there they will see something of the opportunities and attractions which the great Southwest offers to youth. Can any one who knows that section doubt the result? The people of Texas have always been alert to the advantages of attracting new settlers. When Zachary Taylor's army was disbanded after the Mexican war of '48 the state of Texas presented every soldier with a 'Spanish league' of land in the territory between the Nueces and the Rio Grande rivers. This was a tract a little less than three miles square.

"The state has little or no land left to give away now, but there is little doubt that the hospitality and enthusiasm of the people of Texas will find some other way of giving practical emphasis to the charm of the Lone Star empire.

"There is no use going into statistics with regard to the opportunities of Texas and Oklahoma for young men. The newspapers of those states have already done that and will certainly continue to do it while the militia are within their borders. To their testimony, however, the editor of this paper may add that there is not, in his opinion, any part of the United States that today offers greater opportunities to young men than the Southwest. If he had not lived in New York until he was too old to move he would now be a citizen of either Texas or Oklahoma and probably better off physically, mentally and financially."

Carranza makes an argument to show that the United States has no right to send soldiers to Mexico. There's no reasoning with a man whose mind travels in a circle. We have the same right to police Mexico that we would have to feed its starving millions. When anarchy takes possession it lays all laws aside.

Li Yuan Hung has formed a compromise Chinese ministry, and as he is a wise old man, the chances are that he will compromise with everybody who raises a disturbance or makes a demand. The only satisfactory route in China is the compromise route. There are not enough guns and ammunition available to travel any other way.

The owners of the steamship Tabasco have swapped the Mexican for a Cuban flag. It still stands for the hot stuff, but turns up its nose at a tamale or a frijole.

General Nafarrate, the unterrified, is coming toward us with 500 barefoot Juchitecos Indians. General Quixote is also on the move.

What will Culberson do? asks Special Correspondent Dubose. Hasn't he done done it?

Government officials estimate that war with Mexico would cost this country $10,000,000 a month, and that this country could fight nearly six months without making any special financial provision for it. The truth is, a war that would settle things in Mexico would be less expensive, both to that country and to us, than the peace they have been reaching for in that hapless country.

Waco has a chance to immortalize itself by hanging out so many flags, and swinging them so loftily that passengers on every train going through the town will know it is the representative city of all Texas.

The last pronunciamento of Carranza denies most of the statements of fact made by Secretary Lansing. In a case of that sort, the only way to decide who is telling the truth is to refer the issue to a machine gun.

The Iowa supreme court upholds the law which put the saloons out of business in that state on January 1, 1916. Col. Booze is making a hard fight, but inch by inch is losing ground.

Runaway Team Kills Little Waco Girl at Grapevine

A. O. Hilley of 1315 North Twelfth street received a message yesterday from Grapevine, Texas, telling of the death there of little Ola May Lasseter, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Lasseter of Waco, who was killed Friday afternoon in a runaway at Grapevine.

Mrs. Lasseter and little Ola May, the latter three years and four months old, had been on a visit to relatives at Grapevine, while Mr. Lasseter, who travels for the Fairbanks company, was out on the road. When at home they live at the residence of Mr. Hilley.

Details of the sad accident were not given, and it is not known how the team came to run away. The child was buried at Grapevine yesterday, as the relatives live there. It will be with deep regret that friends of the family here learn of the shocking accident, especially as little Ola May was the only child of the family.

Texas Travelers Meet This Morning at the Raleigh

The Texas Travelers will hold forth this morning at the Raleigh hotel, beginning at 9:30, and as is customary, will meet promptly and dispatch business expeditiously. Several important matters will be handled at this session. After adjournment those so desiring will meet at the Young Men's Business League rooms in response to a general call issued to all knights of the grip, to discuss with the others the matter of a Traveling Men's day at the Cotton Palace this fall.

The Texas Travelers since their organization have been engaged in work of a nature that has been of great benefit to the men who travel, and so well have the duties of the various officers and committeemen been performed that the association has grown wonderfully in membership and is growing rapidly from one meeting to another.

Battle of Skagerrack Shows Large Battleships Are Best Says Admr. George Dewey

That the recent sea battle between the British and German fleets has proven a glorification of the dreadnaught, and that it has justified the program advised by naval experts of the United States for the last twenty years, is the assertion made by George Dewey, admiral of the navy and president of the general board. He asserts this in an article upon "Lessons of Skagerrack," which will appear in "Sea Power," the official publication of the Navy League, and which will be off the press tomorrow. The article follows:

The most titanic clash of sea forces in the history of the world took place off the mouth of the Skagerrack, on May 31, between the German and British fleets. From a naval standpoint, this is the most interesting event in the present generation. Its importance is not so much due to the results one way or another in advantage to the contestants as in the lessons it teaches with relation to the qualifications in actual contact of those elements that go to make up the modern fleet.

In the battle of Skagerrack great armored dreadnaughts came to grips for the first time in the history of the world. In that fight the battle cruiser played its part for the first time in a pitched engagement. Light cruisers were in the midst of the fighting and battled and died. Those daredevils of the sea, the destroyers, for the first time in history closed in on first-class ships in broad daylight to drive home their torpedoes and take their one chance in a hundred of surviving.

In fact, a modern first-class fleet with its various units went to grips with an enemy of its kind and tested its qualifications. All these fighting machines of the sea have heretofore been creations of theoretical but somewhat untried efficiency. The day of their test was May 31. The showings of that day will have much to do with the fleets of the future built by all the nations of the world.

Just what happened at Skagerrack is not yet clear and conclusions drawn from that fight are made from incomplete evidence and may easily be upset. But two weeks after the fight it would seem that something like the following happened:

FOUGHT AT SHORT RANGE.

The German fleet was feeling its way to sea, looking for an opportunity to strike a blow with conditions to its advantage. The British fleet was spread out over three hundred miles of the North Sea. The day was hazy and a ship could not be made out more than six miles.

This necessarily short range was to the liking of the Germans. Their fleet was concentrated. They determined to give battle.

Destroyers and trawlers make up the advance line that the British draw across the North Sea. Back of these are the fast cruisers. Still further back and subject to call are the battleship squadrons.

The advance line reported the presence of the German fleet. The British were anxious for a decisive battle. The battle cruiser squadron immediately closed in. It was nearer than the battleships and had thirty knots of speed against their twenty, so it got into the fight first. Battle cruisers were not intended to fight battleships and it was suspected that German dreadnaughts were ready for action. Admiral Beatty, however, determined to attempt to hold the German fleet until the British battleships could come up. He therefore went in with his battle cruisers.

It appears that three of his ships went to their death early in the fight because of this attempt. The Queen Mary, the Indefatigable, the Invincible, as dashing ships as ever put to sea, were sunk. It would seem, however, that they inflicted losses upon the enemy that made their sacrifice worth while. They evidently succeeded partially in their purpose. Some of the British dreadnaughts did get into the fight,

But the lesson is this: Battle cruisers with the weight of their armor sacrificed to speed, with fewer big guns than have dreadnaughts, cannot give and take with the latter class of ships. In grips with dreadnaughts they are pretty sure to be sunk. This has been the theory of naval experts all along but that moot question of the point to which armor should be sacrificed to speed has never before had any actual experiments upon which to base its deductions.

The battle cruiser was crumpled up and its unfitness to play a leading role in naval dramas was demonstrated. The Queen Mary, a magnificent ship of her kind, displacing 25,000 tons, could not survive the big shells of the Germans.

THE DREADNAUGHTS ARRIVE.

This was the first phase of the battle. It seems to have been after the sinking of these three ships that the British battleship squadron, led by the Warspite, arrived. There were four ships in this squadron and they immediately plunged into the midst of the fight. They appear to have found a fleet that greatly outnumbered them. They unquestionably came in for a tremendous amount of hammering. Every vessel was struck many times. The Warspite and the Marlborough both suffered many serious hits. The Marlborough was torpedoed. Yet neither of these ships sank, both found their way back to port and both will soon be back in the service.

Captain Phillpots of the Warspite tells a thrilling tale of the experience of his vessel and the punishment she took. His steering gear went wrong and his ship got out of control. She plunged into the midst of the enemy fleet. She drew the concentrated fire of six enemy battleships at the time. She ran amuck and sought to do all the execution possible. Her every gun worked to the maximum.

Yet she stood her punishment and came through. She served the purpose for which a big ship is created. She proved the fitness of herself and her class to perform the purpose for which dreadnaughts are built. She proved the correctness of the theory of those experts who have held that it is wise to sacrifice much possible speed for heavy armor and big guns.

The Warspite is a vessel readily comparable with our own Texas and New York. She has a similar displacement, 27,500 tons. She has eight 15-inch guns where the American ships have ten 14-inch guns. She is four knots faster than are the American ships and her endurance is probably less. What she did American dreadnaughts should be able to do.

The Marlborough is a 25,000 ton ship, of about the class of our Arkansas and Wyoming. She too stood a vast amount of punishment, including that of being torpedoed. This latter test of a modern battleship is very interesting. A number of fighting ships have been sunk in the present war by torpedoes, but they were mostly old vessels and without the resistance of the newer ships. The impression that a torpedo is sure to prove the undoing of the dreadnaughts has not yet been demonstrated and the survival of the Marlborough tends to disprove it.

DESTROYERS ATTACK IN DAYLIGHT.

A third and most interesting phase of the battle of Skagerrack was the attack of destroyers on both sides. These tiny ships, which were intended to serve the purpose of a screen, to be outriders and scouts of the big ships, had currently been regarded heretofore as being incapable of attacking first-class ships in the daytime. Their method of attack was set down as being one covered by darkness or by fog. Under these conditions destroyers are intended to creep in on the big ships, unleash their torpedoes and attempt to escape before they are sunk.

It had been known that the Germans had practiced day attacks with their destroyers. This was a possible use of destroyers that neither American nor British fleets had given much consideration. In the North Sea battle, however, before darkness descended upon the British fleet, got in close, and discharge their torpedoes. It is believed that near a dozen of them were sunk, and it is probably true that they did not succeed in destroying any British first-class ship. They unquestionably came near getting the Marlborough, however, and it is not shown that such an attack did not prove strategically advisable.

It is believed that the British fleet responded by sending its destroyers into the midst of the German fleet under similar circumstances. Certain it is that something near a dozen British destroyers were lost. The returns do not yet indicate what destruction these vessels created in the German fleet, and it is therefore not possible to draw conclusions as to whether their sacrifice should have been made. The fact remains that destroyers played a very important part in the fighting and were active throughout the engagement. The usefulness of these small ships in a great struggle such as that which took place off Skagerrack is regarded as having been demonstrated.

A point of intense interest to the general public in this first big sea fight of modern navies is the high rate of loss of life aboard ships sunk. On the Queen Mary, the Indefatigable and the Invincible, there was hardly a man saved. Already the United States navy department is receiving great numbers of letters from individuals who have suggestions to make as to devices that might be used for saving lives aboard fighting ships. These individuals seem to draw the conclusion that no precaution is taken aboard a battleship for saving life in case the ship is sunk in battle. This is not true. When a battleship is stripped for action there is certainly no place on her deck for boats that might be used for life saving. She has aboard, however, pneumatic rafts, and every man has his pneumatic belt which would keep him afloat.

ALL DIE WITH THEIR SHIPS.

In time of battle, however, there is no time and no inclination to make use of these devices. When a battleship is hit and seriously damaged there is no way of knowing whether or not she is about to sink. It may be possible that she will remain afloat for hours, or that she may not sink at all. Her purpose is to continue to damage the enemy to the greatest possible extent. A single final shot from a sinking ship may be the blow that will turn the tide of battle and the destiny of empires.

A damaged battleship, therefore, continues to fight. The men remain in the fire rooms, in the turrets, at their guns. Every man continues that particular job which is his in fighting the ship as long as she may strike a blow. It therefore happens that when the battleship goes down there is practically nobody on dec kand there is no man who may leave his post in time to put on a life belt or launch a raft. Quite naturally, every man dies with the ship.

The theory of fighting the ship until the last moment seems to have been exemplified by practically all those that were sunk in the recent battle.

The battle of Skagerrack seems to have justified the position which has long been taken by the experts of the general board of the American navy, a position which has met the approval of most American authorities and which has been crystallized into the program which America has followed. The general board has recommended for fifteen years that the United States place its chief reliance in big ships. Since the dreadnaught came into being it has maintained that that vessel should be made the backbone of the fleet. If appropriations were sufficient to provide but one class of ships, the general board has insisted that they be dreadnaughts.

AMERICAN PROGRAM JUSTIFIED.

There is a constant tendency on the part of the public to go off at a tangent in its enthusiasm for the class of ship that at a given time is attracting wide attention. Last fall, for instance, the public clamored for many submarines and favored disregarding appropriations for dreadnaughts or battle cruisers. Later, the battle cruiser has been attractpart of the public to go off at a tanging much attention to itself because the incidental clashes of the present war have been battles between scout ships. So the clamor this spring has been very largely for battle cruisers.

The dreadnaught has attracted very little attention because she has not heretofore been in the fighting. The public did not see that the very existence of British dreadnaughts in the North Sea resulted in the bottling up of all Germany. It did not realize generally that the battleship was performing its purpose without the necessity of fighting. The present clash, however, demonstrates that in the final issue it is the dreadnaught which means victory or defeat.

This battle seems also to have proven the value of that other branch of the fighting fleet which has been given most attention in the American Navy, the destroyer. The many opportunities for usefulness and the great possibilities of execution which rest with these little ships seems to have been demonstrated. The battle of Skagerrack seems to have shown that the United States has chosen wisely in selecting the units upon which she would depend in making a fleet from appropriations that made it impossible to have all the units desired.

The usefulness of the battle cruiser or the scout cruiser has not been disproven but the inadvisability of depending upon fast, lightly-aromered vesels in a clash in which dreadnaughts are engaged is shown. The cruiser is a necessity in any modern fleet unless that fleet is willing to grant certain advantages to its rivals which are provided with these fast ships. The theory that a time would come when they would displace dreadnaughts must, however, in the face of the new facts, be given over.

The battle of Skagerrack teaches less of the value of guns of various calibers than of most of the vital problems of the navy. All the fighting was close in. The marksmanship was, therefore, not very exacting. The test on the guns was not great. Any gun and almost any gunner ought to be able to make hits at six miles. The advantage attributed to British guns and gunners had little opportunity to demonstrate itself. Likewise are the results in ships sunk by the British cruisers and dreadnaughts still unknown. The deadlines of the great British 15-inch gun cannot yet be said to have been determined.

Waco Letter Carriers Will Attend State Meet at Austin

Leaving Waco today on a train from Dallas which carries the Dallas Letter Carriers' band, the only band of the kind in the Southwest, several Waco letter carriers, clerks and a few ladies will go to Austin to attend the meeting of the Texas Letter Carriers' association.

The Texas Letter Carriers' association, which is a branch of the National Letter Carriers' association, will meet in Austin July 3 and 4, tomorrow and next day, and from present indications this will be one of the largest meetings held in some time.

The delegates from the Waco letter carriers will consist of A. C. Jackson, Fred Wallace, Harvey Shelton, while local postoffice clerks, who will also meet in Austin at the same time, will be represented by Walter Wallace. The meetings will be called to order at the same time and place, but will then hold separate gatherings.

Waco has the honor of having the state secretary of the Texas Letter Carriers' association, in the person of Wallace Taylor, and Mr. Taylor is a candidate for re-election, and is opposed by a letter carrier from Houston and another from Fort Worth; he has made a most efficient officer, and his friends here will hope that he may be re-elected. Two cities are seeking to secure the next convention of the letter carriers and clerks, these being Corpus Christi and Amarillo. Mrs. Fred Wallace and Mrs. Wallace Taylor will attend the Austin meeting.

The national meeting of the letter carriers will be held in Dallas in September of next year, and preparations for the gathering have already been started.

One of the matters to be considered at the Austin meeting of the letter carriers and clerks will be the proposition of a retirement fund for superannuated employes after they shall have reached old age. The meetings will continue for two days and many different matters will receive attention.

DAILY SHORT STORY.

Frailty, or Fidelity?

By ELSIE SEE.

(Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Abigail Thomas was seated in the visitors' gallery of the state senate one morning, and in her smartly tailored black silk suit and a flowered hat her fair beauty was even more pronounced than usual. The senate was discussing a bill for the control of public utilities by city governments, and Abigail's father had just concluded a speech in its favor. Representatives of corporations, public-spirited citizens and lovers of oratory filled the visitors' section. The discussion became more heated with each speaker's contribution.

While the interest was at its height, the heavy swinging doors of the senate chamber opened slowly and there entered a pale, sad-faced young woman who looked at the strange scene about her in a confused way. In her plain, dark blue suit and hat she would have attracted little attention had it not been for the searching look in her half-frightened, half-determined eyes.

As the woman slowly approached the brass rail which formed a semicircle dividing the senatorial desks from the seat section for visitors, Abigail Thomas recognized her as Mamie Morton, who, as Mamie Ellis, had been her classmate in grammar school, but who was now the tired and patient little dressmaker of Thomasville. Only a day or two before, Senator Thomas had spoken of the efforts Mamie was making to have her husband pardoned from state prison, and when Abigail saw her standing there looking so timid, yet so determined, she felt a desire to help her.

Perhaps the desire was made stronger because Abigail was beginning to feel remorseful about a quarrel she had had with Stanley Worth the night before. Stanley Worth was governor of the state and a suitor for Abigail's hand. After proposing to her four times in three months and being given a different reason each time for her refusal, he had told her that although he honestly loved her he would not longer furnish her opportunities for indulging her capriciousness.

Abigail's estimation of him went up many points upon this show of spirit, but a moment later it was consumed in the heat of her wrath, as he gave a semitragic quotation of "Frailty, thy name is woman." So the quarrel continued until Abigail said to herself that she would make him suffer for that contemptuous slander of her sex and until Stanley Worth said to himself that if he ever married any woman it would be because she did the proposing and inveigled him into acceptance before he knew what he was doing.

From her seat in the visitors' gallery, Abigail went over toward the woman standing beside the brass rail. A roll call having been demanded, the secretary was calling the names of the senators, whose ayes and noes were being given in voices ranging from high-pitched nasal wheezes to guttural growls. Mamie Morton approached the sergeant-at-arms and told him she must speak to Senator Thomas. The big officer shook his head doubtfully and reluctantly approached the senator, who left his seat and went at once to the woman.

"I cannot promise that the governor has taken any action," said Senator Thomas in answer to her eager question. "Many matters of state claim his attention at this time, and he may not have had time to look into this."

"But, sir," protested the woman, becoming bolder in her suspense, "it has been a whole week since the petitions from our citizens and the judge and jury who tried poor Henry were sent to his office. Henry is innocent, sir, and has already served a year in prison."

"I believe he is innocent," said the senator, "in spite of the circumstantial evidence indicating that he took the money from Jabe Ewing's cash drawer. I hope the governor will come to see it as I do, but his decision may seem slow to you. Come with me, though, and we will see what has been done."

"And let me go, too, won't you, dad?" asked Abigail, who surprised her father by joining them and greeting Mamie cordially.

"Why, certainly, daughter, but I thought—you know, we're going down to the governor's office."

"Yes, I know, but I want to go, and perhaps I can be of some comfort to Mamie while she is waiting." Her father knew better than to question Abigail's whims.

When they reached the governor's suite of offices, Senator Thomas gave his card to a smiling secretary, who took it at once into the governor's private office and returned a moment later bidding the senator enter the gubernatorial presence. As they sat waiting, Mamie told Abigail how everything pointed to Henry's innocence, including an affidavit voluntarily sent her the week before by Dave Gibson, now living out West, but at the time of the Ewing robbery a citizen of Thomasville. In his statement he told that owing to his dislike of Henry Morton, who had been his rival for Mamie's hand, he had kept quiet when he had evidence that the money from Jabe Ewing's cash drawer had been taken by two tramps who buried part of it in Henry Morton's garden merely to throw suspicion from themselves and point it toward Henry, who was employed in Ewing's store.

As the door of the inner office opened, Mamie stopped talking and started from her seat as Senator Thomas entered, followed by the governor. Her eyes searched pitifully for some sign that the pardon was forthcoming. As the governor recognized Abigail, who had quickly risen and was standing looking out of the window so that her face could not be seen, he stopped short for an instant, but quickly recovered his composure and brought his right hand from behind him and handed Mamie Morton a long folded paper bearing the State steal.

"I am happy to give you this paper, Mrs. Morton," he said kindly. "When you present it to the warden of the prison he will give freedom to your husband."

Senator Thomas quickly guided Mamie to the door and out through the long corridors to the entrance of the building, talking quietly to her all the way, as if to stem the tearful current of her gratitude.

In the governor's office, Abigail turned and walked up to Stanley Worth in a way that made him wonder whether his good fortune was a dream. The smiling secretary had discreetly withdrawn to another room.

"Stanley, I came here partly to help that poor woman by being with her in her distress and partly to be present when you have to recognize that the name of one woman, at least, was not frailty. But do you know why I have remained?" Her face changed from pink to white and from white to pink again before Stanley Worth managed to murmur a response.

"No, I do not," he said, and his voice sounded queer and unnatural.

"I've remained to say that the fidelity shown by that woman has made me ashamed of what you called my frailty, and to say——" Abigail paused, and her lovely head went higher and her clear blue eyes looked fearlessly into Stanley Worth's gray ones, "that if you're determined not to propose to me again, then I'll take advantage of leap year and propose to you."

The blissful expression brought to the governor's face by this startling confession was partially dimmed the next instant by the shadow of Senator Thomas re-entering the doorway, but he managed to whisper a reply, and the senator wondered what on earth it could be that Abigail had been asking of the governor which brought from him an impassioned assurance that an official confirmation of his decision would be given her at the earliest possible opportunity. But Abigail's whims were always more or less of a puzzle to her father.

THE END MAY BE IN SIGHT.

When it was made plain that the allies were gathering their forces for a general onslaught on the central powers, word went out from Berlin that Germany was ready for peace. The reply from London, Paris and Petrograd was that the hour had not struck for peace.

The sequel of these interchanges is found in the reports which are published this morning from every battle front.

England has launched the most formidable offensive she ever has thrown against a foe, and is marching straight ahad against German trenches in the north of France.

Belgium, France, Italy, Serbia and, mightiest of all, Russia, are flinging simultaneously uncounted multitudes against the Teutonic armies. There are, perhaps, more than 8,000,000 soldiers in action today against the armies of the central powers.

Not since time began was ever such a contest waged. The Teutons are fighting with a zeal and stubbornness which have never been equaled, but they are too greatly outnumbered to admit any doubt as to the result. It was forecast in the capture by the British on yesterday of a long line of German trenches, and by advances made everywhere by the allies.

If the drive thus begun is maintained without counter-offensive by the Teutons, the end of the war will soon be in sight.

The federal reserve bank at Dallas has $18,000,000 deposits, against $7,000,000 deposits at the same time last year. Texas, by this token, is more than twice as well off in its pocketbook as it was a year ago. Yet some people cannot understand why prosperity should now be knocking at the door of every wideawake Southern city.

San Antonio invites Colonel Roosevelt to make that a recruiting point for the gathering of his proposed division. A more appropriate location would be in the middle west, where the Colonel would have a chance to round up the bull moose cohorts who were lately disbanded.

Short courses in agriculture will be conducted in sixty Texas communities, under the auspices of the extension service of Agricultural and Mechanical college, during July and August. That ought to furnish good insurance against any irreparable damage in the July primary.

There are plenty of signs of attempted elimination, and still the old line-up stands: Culberson, Colquitt and Henry. Is it possible that the state is to be treated to a coup d'etat, pulled off a day or two before the primary? Keep a sharp lookout, boys. There's something brewing.

THEY WILL SEE TEXAS.

The incidental advertising of Texas as the result of thousands of troops from all over the United States pouring through this state on their way to the border has been referred to by The News. Writing on the same subject in Commerce and Finance, a New York financial journal, Theodore H. Price, the well known economist, says:

"About 100,000 young men, chiefly from the cities of the North and West, will shortly be on their way to the Mexican border. For the most part they will go to Texas. On the way and while they are there they will see something of the opportunities and attractions which the great Southwest offers to youth. Can any one who knows that section doubt the result? The people of Texas have always been alert to the advantages of attracting new settlers. When Zachary Taylor's army was disbanded after the Mexican war of '48 the state of Texas presented every soldier with a 'Spanish league' of land in the territory between the Nueces and the Rio Grande rivers. This was a tract a little less than three miles square.

"The state has little or no land left to give away now, but there is little doubt that the hospitality and enthusiasm of the people of Texas will find some other way of giving practical emphasis to the charm of the Lone Star empire.

"There is no use going into statistics with regard to the opportunities of Texas and Oklahoma for young men. The newspapers of those states have already done that and will certainly continue to do it while the militia are within their borders. To their testimony, however, the editor of this paper may add that there is not in his opinion, any part of the United States that today offers greater opportunities to young men than the Southwest. If he had not lived in New York until he was too old to move he would now be a citizen of either Texas or Oklahoma and probably better off physically, mentally and financially."

Carranza makes an argument to show that the United States has no right to send soldiers to Mexico. There's no reasoning with a man whose mind travels in a circle. We have the same right to police Mexico that we would have to feed its starving millions. When anarchy takes possession it lays all laws aside.

Li Yuan Hung has formed a compromise Chinese ministry, and as he is a wise old man, the chances are that he will compromise with everybody who raises a disturbance or makes a demand. The only satisfactory route in China is the compromise route. There are not enough guns and ammunition available to travel any other way.

The owners of the steamship Tabasco have swapped the Mexican for a Cuban flag. It still stands for the hot stuff, but turns up its nose at a tamale or a frijole.

General Nafarrate, the unterrified, is coming toward us with 500 barefoot Juchitecos Indians. General Quixote is also on the move.

What will Culberson do? asks Special Correspondent Dubose. Hasn't he done done it?

Government officials estimate that war with Mexico would cost this country $10,000,000 a month, and that this country could fight nearly six months without making any special financial provision for it. The truth is, a war that would settle things in Mexico would be less expensive, both to that country and to us, than the peace they have been reaching for in that hapless country.

Waco has a chance to immortalize itself by hanging out so many flags, and swinging them so loftily that passengers on every train going through the town will know it is the representative city of all Texas.

The last pronunciamento of Carranza denies most of the statements of fact made by Secretary Lansing. In a case of that sort, the only way to decide who is telling the truth is to refer the issue to a machine gun.

The Iowa supreme court upholds the law which put the saloons out of business in that state on January 1, 1916. Col. Booze is making a hard fight, but inch by inch is losing ground.

Jacksonville reports a cucumber forty-five inches long, in the shape of a snake. Arguments in favor of submission continue to come in from every quarter.

Runaway Team Kills Little Waco Girl at Grapevine

A. O. Hilley of 1315 North Twelfth street received a message yesterday from Grapevine, Texas, telling of the death there of little Ola May Lasseter, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Lasseter of Waco, who was killed Friday afternoon in a runaway at Grapevine.

Mrs. Lasseter and little Ola May, the latter three years and four months old, had been on a visit to relatives at Grapevine, while Mr. Lasseter, who travels for the Fairbanks company, was out on the road. When at home they live at the residence of Mr. Hilley.

Details of the sad accident were not given, and it is not known how the team came to run away. The child was buried at Grapevine yesterday, as the relatives live there. It will be with deep regret that friends of the family here learn of the shocking accident, especially as little Ola May was the only child of the family.

Battle of Skagerrack Shows Large Battleships Are Best Says Admr. George Dewey

That the recent sea battle between the British and German fleets has proven a glorification of the dreadnaught, and that it has justified the program advised by naval experts of the United States for the last twenty years, is the assertion made by George Dewey, admiral of the navy and president of the general board. He asserts this in an article upon "Lessons of Skagerrack," which will appear in "Sea Power," the official publication of the Navy League, and which will be off the press tomorrow. The article follows:

The most titanic clash of sea forces in the history of the world took place off the mouth of the Skagerrack, on May 31, between the German and British fleets. From a naval standpoint, this is the most interesting event in the present generation. Its importance is not so much due to the results one way or another in advantage to the contestants as in the lessons it teaches with relation to the qualifications in actual contact of those elements that go to make up the modern fleet.

In the battle of Skagerrack great armored dreadnaughts came to grips for the first time in the history of the world. In that fight the battle cruiser played its part for the first time in a pitched engagement. Light cruisers were in the midst of the fighting and battled and died. Those daredevils of the sea, the destroyers, for the first time in history closed in on first-class ships in broad daylight to drive home their torpedoes and take their one chance in a hundred of surviving.

In fact, a modern first-class fleet with its various units went to grips with an enemy of its kind and tested its qualifications. All these fighting machines of the sea have heretofore been creations of theoretical but somewhat untried efficiency. The day of their test was May 31. The showings of that day will have much to do with the fleets of the future built by all the nations of the world.

Just what happened at Skagerrack is not yet clear and conclusions drawn from that fight are made from incomplete evidence and may easily be upset. But two weeks after the fight it would seem that something like the following happened:

FOUGHT AT SHORT RANGE.

The German fleet was feeling its way to sea, looking for an opportunity to strike a blow with conditions to its advantage. The British fleet was spread out over three hundred miles of the North Sea. The day was hazy and a ship could not be made out more than six miles.

This necessarily short range was to the liking of the Germans. Their fleet was concentrated. They determined to give battle.

Destroyers and trawlers make up the advance line that the British draw across the North Sea. Back of these are the fast cruisers. Still further back and subject to call are the battleship squadrons.

The advance line reported the presence of the German fleet. The British were anxious for a decisive battle. The battle cruiser squadron immediately closed in. It was nearer than the battleships and had thirty knots of speed against their twenty, so it got into the fight first. Battle cruisers were not intended to fight battleships and it was suspected that German dreadnaughts were ready for action. Admiral Beatty, however, determined to attempt to hold the German fleet until the British battleships could come up. He therefore went in with his battle cruisers.

It appears that three of his ships went to their death early in the fight because of this attempt. The Queen Mary, the Indefatigable, the Invincible, as dashing ships as ever put to sea, were sunk. It would seem, however, that they inflicted losses upon the enemy that made their sacrifice worth while. They evidently succeeded partially in their purpose. Some of the British dreadnaughts did get into the fight,

But the lesson is this: Battle cruisers with the weight of their armor sacrificed to speed, with fewer big guns than have dreadnaughts, cannot give and take with the latter class of ships. In grips with dreadnaughts they are pretty sure to be sunk. This has been the theory of naval experts all along but that moot question of the point to which armor should be sacrificed to speed has never before had any actual experiments upon which to base its deductions.

The battle cruiser was crumpled up and its unfitness to play a leading role in naval dramas was demonstrated. The Queen Mary, a magnificent ship of her kind, displacing 25,000 tons, could not survive the big shells of the Germans.

THE DREADNAUGHTS ARRIVE.

This was the first phase of the battle. It seems to have been after the sinking of these three ships that the British battleship squadron, led by the Warspite, arrived. There were four ships in this squadron and they immediately plunged into the midst of the fight. They appear to have found a fleet that greatly outnumbered them. They unquestionably came in for a tremendous amount of hammering. Every vessel was struck many times. The Warspite and the Marlborough both suffered many serious hits. The Marlborough was torpedoed. Yet neither of these ships sank, both found their way back to port and both will soon be back in the service.

Captain Phillpots of the Warspite tells a thrilling tale of the experience of his vessel and the punishment she took. His steering gear went wrong and his ship got out of control. She plunged into the midst of the enemy fleet. She drew the concentrated fire of six enemy battleships at the time. She ran amuck and sought to do all the execution possible. Her every gun worked to the maximum.

Yet she stood her punishment and came through. She served the purpose for which a big ship is created. She proved the fitness of herself and her class to perform the purpose for which dreadnaughts are built. She proved the correctness of the theory of those experts who have held that it is wise to sacrifice much possible speed for heavy armor and big guns.

The Warspite is a vessel readily comparable with our own Texas and New York. She has a similar displacement, 27,500 tons. She has eight 15-inch guns where the American ships have ten 14-inch guns. She is four knots faster than are the American ships and her endurance is probably less. What she did American dreadnaughts should be able to do.

The Marlborough is a 25,000 ton ship, of about the class of our Arkansas and Wyoming. She too stood a vast amount of punishment, including that of being torpedoed. This latter test of a modern battleship is very interesting. A number of fighting ships have been sunk in the present war by torpedoes, but they were mostly old vessels and without the resistance of the newer ships. The impression that a torpedo is sure to prove the undoing of the dreadnaughts has not yet been demonstrated and the survival of the Marlborough tends to disprove it.

DESTROYERS ATTACK IN DAYLIGHT.

A third and most interesting phase of the battle of Skagerrack was the attack of destroyers on both sides. These tiny ships, which were intended to serve the purpose of a screen, to be outriders and scouts of the big ships, had currently been regarded heretofore as being incapable of attacking first-class ships in the daytime. Their method of attack was set down as being one covered by darkness or by fog. Under these conditions destroyers are intended to creep in on the big ships, unleash their torpedoes and attempt to escape before they are sunk.

It had been known that the Germans had practiced day attacks with their destroyers. This was a possible use of destroyers that neither American nor British fleets had given much consideration. In the North Sea battle, however, before darkness descended upon the British fleet, got in close, and discharge their torpedoes. It is believed that near a dozen of them were sunk, and it is probably true that they did not succeed in destroying any British first-class ship. They unquestionably came near getting the Marlborough, however, and it is not shown that such an attack did not prove strategically advisable.

It is believed that the British fleet responded by sending its destroyers into the midst of the German fleet under similar circumstances. Certain it is that something near a dozen British destroyers were lost. The returns do not yet indicate what destruction these vessels created in the German fleet, and it is therefore not possible to draw conclusions as to whether their sacrifice should have been made. The fact remains that destroyers played a very important part in the fighting and were active throughout the engagement. The usefulness of these small ships in a great struggle such as that which took place off Skagerrack is regarded as having been demonstrated.

A point of intense interest to the general public in this first big sea fight of modern navies is the high rate of loss of life aboard ships sunk. On the Queen Mary, the Indefatigable and the Invincible, there was hardly a man saved. Already the United States navy department is receiving great numbers of letters from individuals who have suggestions to make as to devices that might be used for saving lives aboard fighting ships. These individuals seem to draw the conclusion that no precaution is taken aboard a battleship for saving life in case the ship is sunk in battle. This is not true. When a battleship is stripped for action there is certainly no place on her deck for boats that might be used for life saving. She has aboard, however, pneumatic rafts, and every man has his pneumatic belt which would keep him afloat.

ALL DIE WITH THEIR SHIPS.

In time of battle, however, there is no time and no inclination to make use of these devices. When a battleship is hit and seriously damaged there is no way of knowing whether or not she is about to sink. It may be possible that she will remain afloat for hours, or that she may not sink at all. Her purpose is to continue to damage the enemy to the greatest possible extent. A single final shot from a sinking ship may be the blow that will turn the tide of battle and the destiny of empires.

A damaged battleship, therefore, continues to fight. The men remain in the fire rooms, in the turrets, at their guns. Every man continues that particular job which is his in fighting the ship as long as she may strike a blow. It therefore happens that when the battleship goes down there is practically nobody on dec kand there is no man who may leave his post in time to put on a life belt or launch a raft. Quite naturally, every man dies with the ship.

The theory of fighting the ship until the last moment seems to have been exemplified by practically all those that were sunk in the recent battle.

The battle of Skagerrack seems to have justified the position which has long been taken by the experts of the general board of the American navy, a position which has met the approval of most American authorities and which has been crystallized into the program which America has followed. The general board has recommended for fifteen years that the United States place its chief reliance in big ships. Since the dreadnaught came into being it has maintained that that vessel should be made the backbone of the fleet. If appropriations were sufficient to provide but one class of ships, the general board has insisted that they be dreadnaughts.

AMERICAN PROGRAM JUSTIFIED.

There is a constant tendency on the part of the public to go off at a tangent in its enthusiasm for the class of ship that at a given time is attracting wide attention. Last fall, for instance, the public clamored for many submarines and favored disregarding appropriations for dreadnaughts or battle cruisers. Later, the battle cruiser has been attractpart of the public to go off at a tangent in its enthusiasm for the class of ship that at a given time is attracting wide attention. Last fall, for instance, the public clamored for many submarines and favored disregarding appropriations for dreadnaughts or battle cruisers. Later, the battle cruiser has been attracting much attention to itself because the incidental clashes of the present war have been battles between scout ships. So the clamor this spring has been very largely for battle cruisers.

The dreadnaught has attracted very little attention because she has not heretofore been in the fighting. The public did not see that the very existence of British dreadnaughts in the North Sea resulted in the bottling up of all Germany. It did not realize generally that the battleship was performing its purpose without the necessity of fighting. The present clash, however, demonstrates that in the final issue it is the dreadnaught which means victory or defeat.

This battle seems also to have proven the value of that other branch of the fighting fleet which has been given most attention in the American Navy, the destroyer. The many opportunities for usefulness and the great possibilities of execution which rest with these little ships seems to have been demonstrated. The battle of Skagerrack seems to have shown that the United States has chosen wisely in selecting the units upon which she would depend in making a fleet from appropriations that made it impossible to have all the units desired.

The usefulness of the battle cruiser or the scout cruiser has not been disproven but the inadvisability of depending upon fast, lightly-aromered vesels in a clash in which dreadnaughts are engaged is shown. The cruiser is a necessity in any modern fleet unless that fleet is willing to grant certain advantages to its rivals which are provided with these fast ships. The theory that a time would come when they would displace dreadnaughts must, however, in the face of the new facts, be given over.

The battle of Skagerrack teaches less of the value of guns of various calibers than of most of the vital problems of the navy. All the fighting was close in. The marksmanship was, therefore, not very exacting. The test on the guns was not great. Any gun and almost any gunner ought to be able to make hits at six miles. The advantage attributed to British guns and gunners had little opportunity to demonstrate itself. Likewise are the results in ships sunk by the British cruisers and dreadnaughts still unknown. The deadlines of the great British 15-inch gun cannot yet be said to have been determined.

Waco Letter Carriers Will Attend State Meet at Austin

Leaving Waco today on a train from Dallas which carries the Dallas Letter Carriers' band, the only band of the kind in the Southwest, several Waco letter carriers, clerks and a few ladies will go to Austin to attend the meeting of the Texas Letter Carriers' association.

The Texas Letter Carriers' association, which is a branch of the National Letter Carriers' association, will meet in Austin July 3 and 4, tomorrow and next day, and from present indications this will be one of the largest meetings held in some time.

The delegates from the Waco letter carriers will consist of A. C. Jackson, Fred Wallace, Harvey Shelton, while local postoffice clerks, who will also meet in Austin at the same time, will be represented by Walter Wallace. The meetings will be called to order at the same time and place, but will then hold separate gatherings.

Waco has the honor of having the state secretary of the Texas Letter Carriers' association, in the person of Wallace Taylor, and Mr. Taylor is a candidate for re-election, and is opposed by a letter carrier from Houston and another from Fort Worth; he has made a most efficient officer, and his friends here will hope that he may be re-elected. Two cities are seeking to secure the next convention of the letter carriers and clerks, these being Corpus Christi and Amarillo. Mrs. Fred Wallace and Mrs. Wallace Taylor will attend the Austin meeting.

The national meeting of the letter carriers will be held in Dallas in September of next year, and preparations for the gathering have already been started.

One of the matters to be considered at the Austin meeting of the letter carriers and clerks will be the proposition of a retirement fund for superannuated employes after they shall have reached old age. The meetings will continue for two days and many different matters will receive attention.

DAILY SHORT STORY.

Frailty, or Fidelity?

By ELSIE SEE.

(Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Abigail Thomas was seated in the visitors' gallery of the state senate one morning, and in her smartly tailored black silk suit and a flowered hat her fair beauty was even more pronounced than usual. The senate was discussing a bill for the control of public utilities by city governments, and Abigail's father had just concluded a speech in its favor. Representatives of corporations, public-spirited citizens and lovers of oratory filled the visitors' section. The discussion became more heated with each speaker's contribution.

While the interest was at its height, the heavy swinging doors of the senate chamber opened slowly and there entered a pale, sad-faced young woman who looked at the strange scene about her in a confused way. In her plain, dark blue suit and hat she would have attracted little attention had it not been for the searching look in her half-frightened, half-determined eyes.

As the woman slowly approached the brass rail which formed a semicircle dividing the senatorial desks from the seat section for visitors, Abigail Thomas recognized her as Mamie Morton, who, as Mamie Ellis, had been her classmate in grammar school, but who was now the tired and patient little dressmaker of Thomasville. Only a day or two before, Senator Thomas had spoken of the efforts Mamie was making to have her husband pardoned from state prison, and when Abigail saw her standing there looking so timid, yet so determined, she felt a desire to help her.

Perhaps the desire was made stronger because Abigail was beginning to feel remorseful about a quarrel she had had with Stanley Worth the night before. Stanley Worth was governor of the state and a suitor for Abigail's hand. After proposing to her four times in three months and being given a different reason each time for her refusal, he had told her that although he honestly loved her he would not longer furnish her opportunities for indulging her capriciousness.

Abigail's estimation of him went up many points upon this show of spirit, but a moment later it was consumed in the heat of her wrath, as he gave a semi-tragic quotation of "Frailty, thy name is woman." So the quarrel continued until Abigail said to herself that she would make him suffer for that contemptuous slander of her sex and until Stanley Worth said to himself that if he ever married any woman it would be because she did the proposing and inveigled him into acceptance before he knew what he was doing.

From her seat in the visitors' gallery, Abigail went over toward the woman standing beside the brass rail. A roll call having been demanded, the secretary was calling the names of the senators, whose ayes and noes were being given in voices ranging from high-pitched nasal wheezes to guttural growls. Mamie Morton approached the sergeant-at-arms and told him she must speak to Senator Thomas. The big officer shook his head doubtfully and reluctantly approached the senator, who left his seat and went at once to the woman.

"I cannot promise that the governor has taken any action," said Senator Thomas in answer to her eager question. "Many matters of state claim his attention at this time, and he may not have had time to look into this."

"But, sir," protested the woman, becoming bolder in her suspense, "it has been a whole week since the petitions from our citizens and the judge and jury who tried poor Henry were sent to his office. Henry is innocent, sir, and has already served a year in prison."

"I believe he is innocent," said the senator, "in spite of the circumstantial evidence indicating that he took the money from Jabe Ewing's cash drawer. I hope the governor will come to see it as I do, but his decision may seem slow to you. Come with me, though, and we will see what has been done."

"And let me go, too, won't you, dad?" asked Abigail, who surprised her father by joining them and greeting Mamie cordially.

"Why, certainly, daughter, but I thought—you know, we're going down to the governor's office."

"Yes, I know, but I want to go, and perhaps I can be of some comfort to Mamie while she is waiting." Her father knew better than to question Abigail's whims.

When they reached the governor's suite of offices, Senator Thomas gave his card to a smiling secretary, who took it at once into the governor's private office and returned a moment later bidding the senator enter the gubernatorial presence. As they sat waiting, Mamie told Abigail how everything pointed to Henry's innocence, including an affidavit voluntarily sent her the week before by Dave Gibson, now living out West, but at the time of the Ewing robbery a citizen of Thomasville. In his statement he told that owing to his dislike of Henry Morton, who had been his rival for Mamie's hand, he had kept quiet when he had evidence that the money from Jabe Ewing's cash drawer had been taken by two tramps who buried part of it in Henry Morton's garden merely to throw suspicion from themselves and point it toward Henry, who was employed in Ewing's store.

As the door of the inner office opened, Mamie stopped talking and started from her seat as Senator Thomas entered, followed by the governor. Her eyes searched pitifully for some sign that the pardon was forthcoming. As the governor recognized Abigail, who had quickly risen and was standing looking out of the window so that her face could not be seen, he stopped short for an instant, but quickly recovered his composure and brought his right hand from behind him and handed Mamie Morton a long folded paper bearing the State steal.

"I am happy to give you this paper, Mrs. Morton," he said kindly. "When you present it to the warden of the prison he will give freedom to your husband."

Senator Thomas quickly guided Mamie to the door and out through the long corridors to the entrance of the building, talking quietly to her all the way, as if to stem the tearful current of her gratitude.

In the governor's office, Abigail turned and walked up to Stanley Worth in a way that made him wonder whether his good fortune was a dream. The smiling secretary had discreetly withdrawn to another room.

"Stanley, I came here partly to help that poor woman by being with her in her distress and partly to be present when you have to recognize that the name of one woman, at least, was not frailty. But do you know why I have remained?" Her face changed from pink to white and from white to pink again before Stanley Worth managed to murmur a response.

"No, I do not," he said, and his voice sounded queer and unnatural.

"I've remained to say that the fidelity shown by that woman has made me ashamed of what you called my frailty, and to say—" Abigail paused, and her lovely head went higher and her clear blue eyes looked fearlessly into Stanley Worth's gray ones, "that if you're determined not to propose to me again, then I'll take advantage of leap year and propose to you."

The blissful expression brought to the governor's face by this startling confession was partially dimmed the next instant by the shadow of Senator Thomas re-entering the doorway, but he managed to whisper a reply, and the senator wondered what on earth it could be that Abigail had been asking of the governor which brought from him an impassioned assurance that an official confirmation of his decision would be given her at the earliest possible opportunity. But Abigail's whims were always more or less of a puzzle to her father.

Suggests Waco Set Example of Displaying Hundreds of Flags

Is Waco overlooking an opportunity to become one of the best advertised cities in a patriotic way, that can be found in the entire south?

A very prominent Texas citizen while passing through Waco is of the opinion that a big opportunity to make Waco famous is being overlooked by the people of this city who have done much in the last few years to cause this city to be known all over the country as the livest city in Texas.

The gentleman stopped off in Waco for a few hours yesterday afternoon upon his return from Austin, where he had been in conference with Governor James E. Ferguson. He left for Washington late last night where he will confer with President Wilson on the Mexican situation.

The speaker has always had a warm spot in his heart for Waco, and never misses an opportunity to extoll the virtues of this city in whatever part of the country he happens to be traveling.

He thinks the big opportunity for Waco is the present critical crisis of the history of this country, would be for every business house and a large majority of the private residences to display large American flags.

He argues that a movement of that kind would not only prove to be of incalculable value to Waco, but that it would sweep like wildfire from one end of the country to the other, and would be conclusive proof to President Wilson, the members of his cabinet, and the members of the house of representatives and the senate, that the people of the country are standing cheerfully and determinedly behind him in his heroic efforts to maintain the honor of this great republic and to protect its citizens wherever they may happen to be. No greater tribute, he declared, could be paid to the chief executive of this nation, than to have old glory waiving from hundreds of Waco buildings.

He further expressed the belief that if such organizations as the Chamber of Commerce, the Young Men's Business League, the Rotary club and the various lodges of Waco with the assistance of Mayor John Dollins and the city commissioners, that the proposition could be put over with ease.

He also spoke of the excellent habit that ministers have of preaching patriotism from their pulpits, and suggested the novel idea of having a big flag floating from the spire of every church in Waco.

Slight surprise was expressed by him when he observed that no flags were flying from the city hall, the court house and the newspaper buildings.

This is a great opportunity for the people of Waco to make nation-wide history, he declared.

Goldstein-Migel Co. Accepts Agency of Sonora Phonograph

Counted as one of the great national phonographs for its reputation as a faithful reproducer of the human voice and music of all kinds, the Sonora talking machines will be added to the myriads of articles which are sold by the Goldstein-Migel company. In securing the agency for this instrument, this great department store feels that it is securing something which will prove a delight to the homes of many of its patrons. The Sonora is a phonograph of international reputation.

At the Panama-Pacific exposition, held last year in San Francisco, the Sonora was awarded the highest honors for tone and quality, receiving a grading of 100 per cent, the only musical instrument of the kind to be given this distinction.

The Sonora has a national reputation among true music lovers. Every part of these phonographs is made by a master workman and the highest grade of perfection has been attained in the Sonora. It has been styled the instrument of quality, with a tone clear as a bell and this designation has been verified by thousands of satisfied purchasers, in all parts of the country.

J. B. Nolan will have charge of the phonograph department at the Goldstein-Migel company. He is well known here and is thoroughly familiar with phonographs. He regards the Sonora as the best instrument on the market today. He was formerly salesman for the Haddorf music house of Illinois, one of the largest concerns of the kind in the Central West.

Everybody is invited to hear these wonderful instruments in the Goldstein-Migel phonograph department, beginning tomorrow.

Y. M. H. A. Will Have Meeting at Temple This Evening

The meeting of the Y. M. H. A. will be called to order promptly at 8 o'clock tonight by the newly elected chairman, M. J. Ginsberg. Abe Levy, secretary of the association, will read the minutes of the last meeting, which will be followed by the general business session, after which the presiding chairman, Sam Goldberg, will take charge of the program and read current events. This will be followed by the reading of a humorous paper on the baseball team by Abe Gollob, whose writings on this subject for the last few meetings have proven quite an entertainment.

A debate between the members of the association will then take place, the subject of which will be of interest to every one present. Dr. Warsaw will offer a criticism on the debate.

RED CROSS WELCOMES TROOP TRAINS WITH MANY REFRESHMENTS

Trainloads of khaki-clad soldiers of the United States were pouring into Waco yesterday and then going out again, and there was time during the stops for the soldiers to walk about the city, stretch their limbs, drink in the fresh air of this delightful section, and to see one of the most solid cities in the country.

The first three trainloads of soldiers came in over the Cotton Belt railroad, the first train arriving shortly before 1 o'clock, and others at regular intervals thereafter, the soldiers being taken in charge at Waco and transferred to the San Antonio & Aransas Pass railroad. These soldiers came from New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois and many other points, and it could be easily noted that they were not from the West.

The Waco branch of the American Red Cross did some excellent work yesterday in the distribution of soft drinks, sandwiches, cake and other delicious things for the palate. The depot at Fourth and Mary streets was a busy scene most of the day, and the workers of the Red Cross made a fine impression and helped the cause by the work they did. Many contributions came in for the cause in the way of things to eat and drink, and the soldiers also had a chance to sample the Texas article of peaches, pronouncing them as good as the best and better than they had been claimed to be.

Much interest was taken in the soldiers by the local public, and they were commented on as they walked the streets. They were a good looking body of men and well behaved. The Katy railroad also has been handling large bodies of troops toward the Mexican border for the last day or two, but the destination of troops is not mentioned.

As indicating the care which the government is taking to protect the troops and to insure that they reach the border safely, all railroad bridges in Texas are guarded night and day, and here in Waco watchmen are stationed at tre railroad bridges, prepared to actively protect the structures if necessity should arise; it is not believed the necessity will arise, but this is simply a step in the matter of preparedness.

All railroads having proper equipment and with Northern connections will have plenty of troops to handle, it is understood, as the roads get the business on an allotment basis.

President W. W. Seley of the Waco chapter of the Red Cross was assisted in the effort to look after the comfort of the troops passing Waco by a committee composed of W. W. Seley, Fred Wolfe, Col. E. S. Thorpe, Fr. Miller, Mrs. Harold Shear, Mrs. G. W. Wilson and Mrs. R. S. Lazenby.

R. S. Lazenby of the Dr. Pepper company furnished the soldiers liberally with Dr. Pepper and Mustang Punch.

Many hundreds of Waco post cards, stamped, were also given away.

Approximately 3,500 troops were served yesterday. As the Illinois troops pulled out, the boys gave three cheers for Waco and the regimental band played "Dixie."

Negro Stick-ups Get White Lad's Earnings

At the point of a revolver, used by three negroes, Johnnie Plank of 815 Webster street, East Waco, a cash boy at Sanger's, was forced to give up $8—half of his month's earnings, about 11 o'clock last night. Plank was returning to his home when the trio of negroes stepped out of an alley near Taylor and Earl streets and held him up.

Two of the negroes were barefooted and youngsters, while the third wore shoes and was older.

Sergeant Joe Rutland and several policemen traced the stick-ups several blocks, but were unable to capture them last night. The department has a pretty good description of the three.

BARACA-PHILATHEA MOVEMENT GROWING

C. H. MACHEN, STATE SECRETARY, RETURNS FROM MINNEAPOLIS CONVENTION.

Aside from Speaking on Program, Several Points Visited on Way Home.

C. H. Machen, state secretary for the Baraca Sunday school classes of Texas and one of the most prominent Sunday school workers in the state, has just returned from Minneapolis, Minn., where he attended the Baraca-Philathea national convention as a delegate at large from Texas, and reports a splendid convention, the body being composed of delegates from the organized Sunday school classes of all denominations throughout the United States. Many interesting problems were discussed, the principal resolution for the coming year being more efficient service, and the slogan of "win the one next to you."

Mr. Machen reports the great organization to be in a very flourishing condition, many of the states having enthusiastic state unions, maintaining paid field workers throughout the year. Many new classes have been added to the national union by reason of such work. Through the respective states is the only way this can be done, as none of the national officers of this great movement receive any salary. The only paid employes are two stenographers. However, many young men and women contribute their time and money liberally for the cause.

Mr. Machen appeared on the program several times during the convention, and besides spoke to some of the other young people's societies in the city of Minneapolis while there. After the convention adjourned, Mr. Machen did some field work in the interest of the organization, having been invited by the delegations from several of the cities represented. He spoke at Waterloo, Des Moines and Valley Junction, Iowa; also at Kansas City, Mo., and has accepted invitations to speak at several points in Kansas this fall.

The Baraca-Philathea work is in a very progressive state all over the Northwest, is the report given. Mr. Machen is now being recognized as one of the best and most active workers in this great movement.

CITY NEWS BRIEFS.

Many applications for renewals of liquor licenses are coming into the county court these days.

There will be an Odd Fellow and Woodmen basket picnic at Ocee on Saturday, July 8. Everybody is cordially invited.

The minutes for the April term of the Nineteenth district court were closed yesterday. Aside from that the day was an unusually quiet one in the local courts.

There was an unusually large crowd on the street yesterday afternoon. Business appeared to be good in most lines, too, and there was an air of optimism apparent.

Probably within thirty days or a little more the first bale of cotton for this county will be in evidence. It is believed that the first bale will be a little later than usual this year.

The Second Presbyterian Christian Endeavor society will meet at 8 o'clock tonight, instead of 7:15 as has been the custom. Miss Willie Rayburn will be the leader. The Endeavorers will have charge of the regular evening services.

If the white way contracts is signed up this week, the order for material can go right in. Then it ought not to be long before actual work would be under way, making it possible to complete the undertaking by fall, when many visitors are expected in Waco.

Next Saturday marks the annual homecoming of the Robinson academy, and Prof. John Strauss and others of the community will welcome all old students and others who attend. This will mark the twenty-eighth anniversary of the founding of the school, and doubtless will be well attended.

Troops are pouring through Texas now to the border and Waco has seen thousands of men pass through in the past few days. The destination of the troops is for the most part a secret, and probably the rank and file do not themselves know where they are going.

Charged with cruelty to animals, a white teamster was arrested last week by Humane Officer G. M. Yarborough. The teamster made bond and the trial is called for Thursday morning in the recorder's court. This is said to be the second offense of the teamster. It is said he placed too heavy a burden on his team.

"The soldier boys who were in Waco yesterday were certainly pleased with their treatment here, and I talked to a number of them who were praising Waco very much," said Constable Leslie Stegall yesterday afternoon. Constable Stegall said that the substantial treatment accorded the boys by the Red Cross and in other ways impressed them very much.

UGH! CALOMEL MAKES YOU SICK! CLEAN LIVER AND BOWELS MY WAY

Just Once! Try "Dodson's Liver Tone" When Bilious, Constipated, Headachy—Don't Lose a Day's Work.

Liven up your sluggish liver. Feel fine and cheerful; make your work a pleasure; be vigorous and full of ambition. But take no dangerous, nasty calomel, because it makes you sick and you may lose a day's work.

Calomel is mercury or quicksilver which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel crashes into sour bile like dynamite, breaking it up. That's when you feel that awful nausea and cramping.

Listen to me. If you want to enjoy the nicest, gentlest liver and bowel cleansing you ever experienced just take a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone tonight. Your druggist or dealer sells you a 50 cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone under my personal money-back guarantee that each spoonful will clean your sluggish liver better than a dose of nasty calomel and that it won't make you sick.

Dodson's Liver Tone is real liver medicine. You'll know it next morning, because you will wake up feeling fine, your liver will be working; headache and dizziness gone; stomach will be sweet and bowels regular.

Dodson's Liver Tone is entirely vegetable, therefore harmless and cannot salivate. Give it to your children. Millions of people are using Dodson's Liver Tone instead of dangerous calomel now. Your druggist will tell you that the sale of calomel is almost stopped entirely here.

Suggests Waco Set Example of Displaying Hundreds of Flags

Is Waco overlooking an opportunity to become one of the best advertised cities in a patriotic way, that can be found in the entire south?

A very prominent Texas citizen while passing through Waco is of the opinion that a big opportunity to make Waco famous is being overlooked by the people of this city who have done much in the last few years to cause this city to be known all over the country as the livest city in Texas.

The gentleman stopped off in Waco for a few hours yesterday afternoon upon his return from Austin, where he had been in conference with Governor James E. Ferguson. He left for Washington late last night where he will confer with President Wilson on the Mexican situation.

The speaker has always had a warm spot in his heart for Waco, and never misses an opportunity to extoll the virtues of this city in whatever part of the country he happens to be traveling.

He thinks the big opportunity for Waco is the present critical crisis of the history of this country, would be for every business house and a large majority of the private residences to display large American flags.

He argues that a movement of that kind would not only prove to be of incalculable value to Waco, but that it would sweep like wildfire from one end of the country to the other, and would be conclusive proof to President Wilson, the members of his cabinet, and the members of the house of representatives and the senate, that the people of the country are standing cheerfully and determinedly behind him in his heroic efforts to maintain the honor of this great republic and to protect its citizens wherever they may happen to be. No greater tribute, he declared, could be paid to the chief executive of this nation, than to have old glory waiving from hundreds of Waco buildings.

He further expressed the belief that if such organizations as the Chamber of Commerce, the Young Men's Business League, the Rotary club and the various lodges of Waco with the assistance of Mayor John Dollins and the city commissioners, that the proposition could be put over with ease.

He also spoke of the excellent habit that ministers have of preaching patriotism from their pulpits, and suggested the novel idea of having a big flag floating from the spire of every church in Waco.

Slight surprise was expressed by him when he observed that no flags were flying from the city hall, the court house and the newspaper buildings.

This is a great opportunity for the people of Waco to make nation-wide history, he declared.

Goldstein-Migel Co. Accepts Agency of Sonora Phonograph

Counted as one of the great national phonographs for its reputation as a faithful reproducer of the human voice and music of all kinds, the Sonora talking machines will be added to the myriads of articles which are sold by the Goldstein-Migel company. In securing the agency for this instrument, this great department store feels that it is securing something which will prove a delight to the homes of many of its patrons. The Sonora is a phonograph of international reputation.

At the Panama-Pacific exposition, held last year in San Francisco, the Sonora was awarded the highest honors for tone and quality, receiving a grading of 100 per cent, the only musical instrument of the kind to be given this distinction.

The Sonora has a national reputation among true music lovers. Every part of these phonographs is made by a master workman and the highest grade of perfection has been attained in the Sonora. It has been styled the instrument of quality, with a tone clear as a bell and this designation has been verified by thousands of satisfied purchasers, in all parts of the country.

J. B. Nolan will have charge of the phonograph department at the Goldstein-Migel company. He is well known here and is thoroughly familiar with phonographs. He regards the Sonora as the best instrument on the market today. He was formerly salesman for the Haddorf music house of Illinois, one of the largest concerns of the kind in the Central West.

Everybody is invited to hear these wonderful instruments in the Goldstein-Migel phonograph department, beginning tomorrow.

Y. M. H. A. Will Have Meeting at Temple This Evening

The meeting of the Y. M. H. A. will be called to order promptly at 8 o'clock tonight by the newly elected chairman, M. J. Ginsberg. Abe Levy, secretary of the association, will read the minutes of the last meeting, which will be followed by the general business session, after which the presiding chairman, Sam Goldberg, will take charge of the program and read current events. This will be followed by the reading of a humorous paper on the baseball team by Abe Gollob, whose writings on this subject for the last few meetings have proven quite an entertainment.

A debate between the members of the association will then take place, the subject of which will be of interest to every one present. Dr. Warsaw will offer a criticism on the debate.

RED CROSS WELCOMES TROOP TRAINS WITH MANY REFRESHMENTS

Trainloads of khaki-clad soldiers of the United States were pouring into Waco yesterday and then going out again, and there was time during the stops for the soldiers to walk about the city, stretch their limbs, drink in the fresh air of this delightful section, and to see one of the most solid cities in the country.

The first three trainloads of soldiers came in over the Cotton Belt railroad, the first train arriving shortly before 1 o'clock, and others at regular intervals thereafter, the soldiers being taken in charge at Waco and transferred to the San Antonio & Aransas Pass railroad. These soldiers came from New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois and many other points, and it could be easily noted that they were not from the West.

The Waco branch of the American Red Cross did some excellent work yesterday in the distribution of soft drinks, sandwiches, cake and other delicious things for the palate. The depot at Fourth and Mary streets was a busy scene most of the day, and the workers of the Red Cross made a fine impression and helped the cause by the work they did. Many contributions came in for the cause in the way of things to eat and drink, and the soldiers also had a chance to sample the Texas article of peaches, pronouncing them as good as the best and better than they had been claimed to be.

Much interest was taken in the soldiers by the local public, and they were commented on as they walked the streets. They were a good looking body of men and well behaved. The Katy railroad also has been handling large bodies of troops toward the Mexican border for the last day or two, but the destination of troops is not mentioned.

As indicating the care which the government is taking to protect the troops and to insure that they reach the border safely, all railroad bridges in Texas are guarded night and day, and here in Waco watchmen are stationed at tre railroad bridges, prepared to actively protect the structures if necessity should arise; it is not believed the necessity will arise, but this is simply a step in the matter of preparedness.

All railroads having proper equipment and with Northern connections will have plenty of troops to handle, it is understood, as the roads get the business on an allotment basis.

President W. W. Seley of the Waco chapter of the Red Cross was assisted in the effort to look after the comfort of the troops passing Waco by a committee composed of W. W. Seley, Fred Wolfe, Col. E. S. Thorpe, Fr. Miller, Mrs. Harold Shear, Mrs. G. W. Wilson and Mrs. R. S. Lazenby.

R. S. Lazenby of the Dr. Pepper company furnished the soldiers liberally with Dr. Pepper and Mustang Punch.

Many hundreds of Waco post cards, stamped, were also given away.

Approximately 3,500 troops were served yesterday. As the Illinois troops pulled out, the boys gave three cheers for Waco and the regimental band played "Dixie."

Negro Stick-ups Get White Lad's Earnings

At the point of a revolver, used by three negroes, Johnnie Plank of 815 Webster street, East Waco, a cash boy at Sanger's, was forced to give up $8—half of his month's earnings, about 11 o'clock last night. Plank was returning to his home when the trio of negroes stepped out of an alley near Taylor and Earl streets and held him up.

Two of the negroes were barefooted and youngsters, while the third wore shoes and was older.

Sergeant Joe Rutland and several policemen traced the stick-ups several blocks, but were unable to capture them last night. The department has a pretty good description of the three.

BARACA-PHILATHEA MOVEMENT GROWING

C. H. MACHEN, STATE SECRETARY, RETURNS FROM MINNEAPOLIS CONVENTION.

Aside from Speaking on Program, Several Points Visited on Way Home.

C. H. Machen, state secretary for the Baraca Sunday school classes of Texas and one of the most prominent Sunday school workers in the state, has just returned from Minneapolis, Minn., where he attended the Baraca-Philathea national convention as a delegate at large from Texas, and reports a splendid convention, the body being composed of delegates from the organized Sunday school classes of all denominations throughout the United States. Many interesting problems were discussed, the principal resolution for the coming year being more efficient service, and the slogan of "win the one next to you."

Mr. Machen reports the great organization to be in a very flourishing condition, many of the states having enthusiastic state unions, maintaining paid field workers throughout the year. Many new classes have been added to the national union by reason of such work. Through the respective states is the only way this can be done, as none of the national officers of this great movement receive any salary. The only paid employes are two stenographers. However, many young men and women contribute their time and money liberally for the cause.

Mr. Machen appeared on the program several times during the convention, and besides spoke to some of the other young people's societies in the city of Minneapolis while there. After the convention adjourned, Mr. Machen did some field work in the interest of the organization, having been invited by the delegations from several of the cities represented. He spoke at Waterloo, Des Moines and Valley Junction, Iowa; also at Kansas City, Mo., and has accepted invitations to speak at several points in Kansas this fall.

The Baraca-Philathea work is in a very progressive state all over the Northwest, is the report given. Mr. Machen is now being recognized as one of the best and most active workers in this great movement.

WHY TOM CONNALLY?

SOME FACTS ABOUT STANDARD OIL AND LEGISLATION THAT STUCK.

If you were seriously ill, you would not want to be the first case of a newly graduated doctor. If your property were at stake, you would not want yours to be the first case of a fledgeling lawyer.

You would want a man of experience to handle your life or your property.

Ours is a representative government. You, reader, and every other man, woman and child in America is represented in congress. Laws affecting you—your property and your life—are made in the congress in which you are represented.

Read, therefore, the following excerpt from Tom Connally's celebrated Eddy speech:

LEGISLATIVE SERVICE.

"The legislative, judicial and executive branches of the public service are distinct and separate in their duties, and the organic law has wisely provided that each is independent of the other. It is the function of the one to enact the laws, of another to construe the laws so enacted, and of the other to enforce the laws so enacted and construed.

"It goes without saying that experience in either of these branches of government should prove of much value to one seeking higher service in the same department of government.

"In 1900 I was elected to the house of representatives of Texas, and served in the twenty-seventh and twenty-eighth legislatures. During this time I served on committees in the house, among which were the committee on finance, which dealt with legislative appropriations; the committee on state affairs, and others, and in the twenty-eighth legislature I was chairman of one of the committees on judiciary.

"In the twenty-eighth legislature Hon. McDonald Meachum of Grimes county and myself, with the co-operation and assistance of Gen. C. K. Bell, who was at that time attorney general of Texas, introduced and secured the passage of the general anti-trust act, known as the Connally-Meachum anti-trust bill. This act has stood the scrutiny of the highest courts. Its constitutionality has been upheld by the supreme court of the United States. Prosecutions by the attorney general under this act have resulted in bringing millions of dollars in penalties into the state treasury and have resulted in reducing the state tax rate in a large degree on more than one occasion. More successful prosecutions have been had under this act and greater sums recovered in behalf of the state than under all former anti-trust acts of Texas in her history.

"Some of the results of this legislation and prosecutions under it are summarized as follows:

State vs. National Cotton Oil company. In district court, Travis county. Judgment for state cancelling defendant's permit. Affirmed by court of civil appeals; affirmed by the United States supreme court.

State vs. Southern Cotton Oil company (similar to above), (197, U. S.)

State vs. Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway company et al. In district court of Travis county. Filed October 6, 1903; judgment rendered September 18, 1906, for $40,000.

State vs. Livestock Commission company; $25,000—1906-07.

State vs. Waters-Pierce Oil company. Filed in district court of Travis county on September 20, 1906. Judgment was rendered for penalties in sum of $1,623,900. Judgment for penalties, interest, etc., amounting to $1,800,000 paid on April 24, 1909.

State vs. U. S. Fidelity and Guarantee company, October 12, 1905, $12,000.

State vs. International Harvester company of America. Judgment for $35,000 in penalties.

State vs. Security Oil company et al, October 26, 1909. Judgment against Security Oil company for $78,350. Navarro Refining company, $1,300; Standard Oil company of Indiana, $62,070.52. Union Tank Line company, $75,000.

State vs. Wichita Mill and Elevator company, January 6, 1909. Judgment for $25,000.

State vs. American Book company. Judgment for $15,000.

State vs. Texas Portland Cement company. Judgment on May 4, 1914, for $15,000.

State vs. Motion Picture Patents company et al. Judgment on January 14, 1914, against General Film company, for $25,000.

State vs. Magnolia Petroleum company et al. In district court of Hunt county. Judgment against Standard Oil company of New Jersey for $500,000.

State vs. Clark and Courts et al. Judgment on June 6, 1914, for $35,000.

State vs. Ahrens & Ott Manufacturing company. Judgment on July 18, 1914, for $25,000.

State vs. Crane company. In district court in Limestone county. Judgment for $75,000.

State vs. Breweries. In district court of Hopkins county. Judgment in January, 1916, for $281,000.

State vs. Swift & Co. Judgment on December 14, 1915, for $40,000.

"This act, in addition to providing punishment in the way of penalties against the companies and forfeiture of charter, also provided for imprisonment in the penitentiary from one to ten years for persons convicted of violating the act.

"Do not understand me to arrogate to myself all of the credit for the enactment of this statute, but I cite it as evidence that, as a representative I was awake to the legislative needs of the people and that the experience in legislation which I have enjoyed qualifies me for further legislative service. During my legislative service of four years, I believe that I acquired an experience and knowledge of legislative affairs and procedure which will prove valuable to a representative in congress.

"In 1906 I was elected prosecuting attorney of Falls county and served in that capacity for two terms. During that time I strove to make a faithful and diligent prosecuting officer. At the end of two terms I did not stand for re-election.

"Since 1910 I have not held, nor have I sought public office, with the exception of my present candidacy for congress.

"For the past twenty years McLennan county has had a citizen of that county in congress. Prior to that time Bell county had Governor Pendleton as a representative; Hamilton county sent the great Judge C. K. Bell to congress, but Falls county has never in its history had a representative in congress. While residence should not be, of itself alone, a determining factor, still if a portion of the district the heart to push its claims before the didate as well qualified as other contestants, it should receive consideration at the hands of the voters."

The above is a plain statement of facts from one of the co-authors of a bill which has brought millions of dollars into the treasury of Texas, and which, in the past produced a reduction in the tax rate.

You will note THAT THE STANDARD OIL COMPANY ALONE HAS PAID NEARLY TWO AND ONE-HALF MILLIONS OF DOLLARS TO THE STATE OF TEXAS UNDER THE CONNALLY-MEACHUM ACT.

You will note that the Connally-Meachum act provides for IMPRISONMENT IN THE PENITENTIARY FOR FROM ONE TO TEN YEARS, of persons violating its provisions.

Don't experiment. Vote for a man whose legislative capacity has been tried. Vote for a man who, even when a very young man, "was awake to the legislative needs of the people" to such an extent that a law which bears his name was placed on the statutes with the above remarkable results.

When you vote, subserve the law of the eternal fitness of things by voting for Tom Connally—the first man to throw his hat in the ring. This is a political advertisement.

"An Innocent Magdalene."

That subtleties of art may be introduced successfully into motion pictures is constantly being confirmed by the great screen productions and W. Christie Cabanne who directs Lillian Gish of the Fine Arts company further proves it in Miss Gish's last play, "An Innocent Magdalene," showing at the Hippodrome Monday and Tuesday. In the play he deals with the garden of life, showing it in the bloom of youth and when evil tempts and overcomes youth, the garden gradually fades and the flowers die. The central figure in the play is a young girl, refined and high-strung. Her sensitive nature reacts strongly to the slightest impulse, and the condition and thoughts of her mind are brought out by embodying them in convenient symbols. Her father tells her that everything that is evil dies, therefore even the roses in the garden that fade are significant to her. Lillian Gish responds to a picture of this sort in a beautiful and marvelously effective way. Her portrayal of the southern girl, Dorothy, has been accorded the highest praise possible by all critics, and one even goes so far as to say Miss Gish is due the sincere thanks of the entire public for the manner in which she has handled the part. Spottiswoode Aitken is the old Colonel Raleigh and Sam deGrasse, the young husband, and never have these men played to better advantage. Jennie Lee is excellent as the old negro mammy.

Dorothy is taught by her old father that family pride is greater than all else, and when she finally elopes with a northerner, the old man writes her name in the list of the dead in the family Bible. The young wife inspires the gambling husband to reform, and even though he must serve a prison term, both are faithful to their vows. But the other woman comes and claims to be his wedded wife, and Dorothy learns that a little child is coming to her. From this point the story develops beautifully and naturally to a sweet ending.

"The Dividend."

There is a subtle touch of drama in the very title of this strong Ince-Triangle play, "The Dividend," which is playing at the Hippodrome theatre Wednesday and Thursday. The story is from the pen of C. Gardner Sullivan and is one of the dramas that touch the very lives of deep thinking people who see it. Charles Ray and William H. Thompson are co-starred in this play of father and son, and never were they better cast. Ray will be remembered for his portrayal of the son in the first Triangle play, "The Coward," and Thompson is equally well known as the old Scotchman in "Peggy," with Billie Burke. Ethel Ullman, the leading woman, is but a young girl who has been developed into a player of unusual merit by Thomas H. Ince. She has had no stage experience, but it is easy to see that she has a splendid future in motion pictures. Margaret Thompson in the role of Maizie of the underworld, gives a new characterization and an excellent one. These four carry almost all of the action of the tense play, but the minor characters that are used are fully adequate.

Steele thinks of nothing but money making and he has decided to give to the stockholders of the company at the end of the year a record-breaking dividend. Young Frank Steele, just home from college, is glad of the prospect of learning his father's business, but when Steele hears of his desire, he laughs at him and giving him money tells him to go on and have a good time. Although the boy has naturally good tendencies, the father's continued neglect sends him to bad companionship and his free money opens to the lad the gates of sin in the underworld. From the naturally fine boy Frank grows slowly to the level of sin and drink and drugs, and at the end of the year is brought to his father as a part of "the dividend." The climax is tragic and the lesson strikes home.

On the same program with "The Dividend" is the ninth chapter of "Gloria's Romance" entitled "The Shadow of Guilt," with "Glori"-ous Billie Burke.

"The Man From Bitter Root."

William Farnum says he finds strength is not always an asset, and it has taken the motion picture to bring this confession from him. In almost every picture of his Mr. Farnum is called upon to fight in order that right may triumph, and he does not believe in "fake" fights before the camera any more than the picture fans do. His last picture is no exception to this rule; "The Man From Bitter Roots," showing at the Hippodrome Friday and Saturday proves the big fellow as much of a fighter as ever. The man is said to forget himself in his parts to such an extent that some players refuse to act the villain in his plays where it is written he shall fight with them. More than one man who has clinched with him in a picture found himself bruised and battered to such an extent he could not play again for days. Betty Schade, a new player with Fox, is Mr. Farnum's leading woman, and her beauty and ability have splendid opportunity as Helen, the reporter. Charles Whittaker and Betty Hart are the principal players after the leads.

The story is of Burt, estranged from his father and working for his own fortune. He agrees with "Slim" Naudin to work for gold in the small sandbars of the river at Bitter Roots and to share fifty-fifty what profits there might be. Burt soon learns that he is doing all the work and Slim is not trustworthy. In a fight later Burt kills Slim in self defense, then starts out to find the man's sister in order to give to her the fortune that was Slim's. Burt takes a chance to save a man from death and gives the fortune into the keeping of Sprudell to give the girl in case he does not return, and when the days pass and Burt does not come, Spurdell goes away with the gold. How Burt comes back and how he and the girl reporter straighten out the tangled affairs, brings on the big climax of "The Man From Bitter Root."

The towers of the Panama cathedral are roofed with pearl shells, which reflect the sunlight so that they can be seen far out at sea.

An additional step for railroad cars that can be lowered into position for use from the platform has been patented by an Alabama man.

WHY TOM CONNALLY?

SOME FACTS ABOUT STANDARD OIL AND LEGISLATION THAT STUCK.

If you were seriously ill, you would not want to be the first case of a newly graduated doctor. If your property were at stake, you would not want yours to be the first case of a fledgeling lawyer.

You would want a man of experience to handle your life or your property.

Ours is a representative government. You, reader, and every other man, woman and child in America is represented in congress. Laws affecting you—your property and your life—are made in the congress in which you are represented.

Read, therefore, the following excerpt from Tom Connally's celebrated Eddy speech:

LEGISLATIVE SERVICE.

"The legislative, judicial and executive branches of the public service are distinct and separate in their duties, and the organic law has wisely provided that each is independent of the other. It is the function of the one to enact the laws, of another to construe the laws so enacted, and of the other to enforce the laws so enacted and construed.

"It goes without saying that experience in either of these branches of government should prove of much value to one seeking higher service in the same department of government.

"In 1900 I was elected to the house of representatives of Texas, and served in the twenty-seventh and twenty-eighth legislatures. During this time I served on committees in the house, among which were the committee on finance, which dealt with legislative appropriations; the committee on state affairs, and others, and in the twenty-eighth legislature I was chairman of one of the committees on judiciary.

"In the twenty-eighth legislature Hon. McDonald Meachum of Grimes county and myself, with the co-operation and assistance of Gen. C. K. Bell, who was at that time attorney general of Texas, introduced and secured the passage of the general anti-trust act, known as the Connally-Meachum anti-trust bill. This act has stood the scrutiny of the highest courts. Its constitutionality has been upheld by the supreme court of the United States. Prosecutions by the attorney general under this act have resulted in bringing millions of dollars in penalties into the state treasury and have resulted in reducing the state tax rate in a large degree on more than one occasion. More successful prosecutions have been had under this act and greater sums recovered in behalf of the state than under all former anti-trust acts of Texas in her history.

"Some of the results of this legislation and prosecutions under it are summarized as follows:

State vs. National Cotton Oil company. In district court, Travis county. Judgment for state cancelling defendant's permit. Affirmed by court of civil appeals; affirmed by the United States supreme court.

State vs. Southern Cotton Oil company (similar to above), (197, U. S.)

State vs. Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway company et al. In district court of Travis county. Filed October 6, 1903; judgment rendered September 18, 1906, for $40,000.

State vs. Livestock Commission company; $25,000—1906-07.

State vs. Waters-Pierce Oil company. Filed in district court of Travis county on September 20, 1906. Judgment was rendered for penalties in sum of $1,623,900. Judgment for penalties, interest, etc., amounting to $1,800,000 paid on April 24, 1909.

State vs. U. S. Fidelity and Guarantee company, October 12, 1905, $12,000.

State vs. International Harvester company of America. Judgment for $35,000 in penalties.

State vs. Security Oil company et al, October 26, 1909. Judgment against Security Oil company for $78,350. Navarro Refining company, $1,300; Standard Oil company of Indiana, $62,070.52. Union Tank Line company, $75,000.

State vs. Wichita Mill and Elevator company, January 6, 1909. Judgment for $25,000.

State vs. American Book company. Judgment for $15,000.

State vs. Texas Portland Cement company. Judgment on May 4, 1914, for $15,000.

State vs. Motion Picture Patents company et al. Judgment on January 14, 1914, aaginst General Film company, for $25,000.

State vs. Magnolia Petroleum company et al. In district court of Hunt county. Judgment against Standard Oil company of New Jersey for $500,000.

State vs. Clark and Courts et al. Judgment on June 6, 1914, for $35,000.

State vs. Ahrens & Ott Manufacturing company. Judgment on July 18, 1914, for $25,000.

State vs. Crane company. In district court in Limestone county. Judgment for $75,000.

State vs. Breweries. In district court of Hopkins county. Judgment in January, 1916, for $281,000.

State vs. Swift & Co. Judgment on December 14, 1915, for $40,000.

BOYS ON BORDER ARE REALIZING GRAVITY OF THE SITUATION

Giving an intimate insight into the feelings of the boys on the border is the following letter from Sergeant H. M. Mason, son of Mr. and Mrs. B. R. Mason of this city, addressed to his mother:

Did you get my McAllen paper? Real nice little place, this, but listen: when I get home again don't EVER let me [illegible] Oh, I am getting along fine; never felt better in all my life and [illegible] I'm here to fight for Old Glory if it becomes necessary, but as soon as they find out it won't be necessary—or as soon as we whip Mexico and settle the whole business—I'll be ready to come home to stay.

Monday Night—Taps sounded before I finished last night, and I've been busy all day. The situation looks grave tonight. It grows worse every day. The signal corps received messages today that between six and seven thousand of Carranza's troops were being concentrated at Reyonosa (eight miles from here) planning to attack Hidalgo, Mission, McAllen and Pharr before the rest of the guard reaches here. But we are ready for them and after we drive them across we will proceed to take Reyonosa. (You'll have to get a map to keep up with your son after two or three days, I'm afraid).

All railroads are holding up regular trains and are giving troop trains the right of way. I hope they can hold things up until they get here. Things may "open up" most any time now and Texas will lead the way.

If only President Wilson could avert this awful thing it would save many a life. It is going to be a great deal harder than people think, and some of us won't come back—your son will, though; don't you worry about that.

Do the people back there really appreciate what we are doing for them here? Why don't they send us more recruits? We need them badly. Are we going to be the only ones to push Old Glory across Mexico?

Wish I could get a furlough long enough to come back there for a day. Should anything happen to you back there don't wait too long to let me know, for it would take a week for me to get a release. Lots of love,

H. M. MASON,
Sergt. Company M, Second Infantry.

Chamber of Commerce Directors

R. E. PELLOW.

R. E. Pellow, not one of Waco's oldest residents, but one of her livest hustlers, has made his impress original, forceful and decided manner since coming to Waco and assuming control of the big Raleigh hotel. Mr. Pellow believes in Waco, and believing in the city has the enthusiasm and the heart to posh its claims before the world—and he also has the opportunity to a marked degree. At the age of eighteen years, Mr. Pellow was appointed chief steward on the flagship of the finest line of passenger steamers at that time sailing the Great Lakes, the position being secured through hard work and constant study of the various duties from cabin boy up. During the winters, when the average steward and purser was enjoying a winter vacation, Pellow was engaged in hotel clerking, kitchen and bakery study from a practical standpoint. At the age of twenty-three he commenced his actual career as hotel manager. Five years ago he acquired, as proprietor, the Hotel Plymouth of Chicago, and later the Parkside hotel at Kewanee, Ill., both of which he still controls; in addition to these last January he acquired a financial interest in the Hotel Raleigh at Waco, and is giving it his personal attention as manager. So thoroughly imbued has Mr. Pellow become with the spirit of Waco, Waco's hospitality, Waco's progressiveness and lovable citizens, that he has decided to remain in Waco as a citizen, to manage the Hotel Raleigh and concentrate his best efforts here. This means much for Waco, but again vindicates the foresight and discrimination of Mr. Pellow. He has made arrangements whereby his interests in Chicago will be well looked after, while concentrating in Waco. During the past ten years, Mr. Pellow has been pleasantly and actively interested in and a member of the Columbus, Ohio, Chamber of Commerce; the organizer of the Appleton, Wisconsin, Boosters' Club; the Trinidad Commercial Club; the Edgewater Business Men's Club of Chicago, and the Greater Des Moines Club. This shows that Mr. Pellow has been active, and he has demonstrated what he can do since he came to Waco. The Chamber of Commerce is fortunate in having him as one of the directors.

BURNING FORD ON PUBLIC ROAD SAVED BY A KEG OF BEER

Slightly disabled and hardly fit for racing, but still able to hobble along, a Ford car made its way into Waco yesterday afternoon for repairs. It had been saved from destruction by fire as if by a miracle—by a keg of beer. The car belonged to W. M. Thompson of Hubbard and was being driven by C. C. Thompson near Tehuacana when it caught fire. The occupants made a valiant fight for the car with the meager resources at hand. They were attempting to smoulder out the fire with their coats when a second Ford rolled into sight headed toward prohibition territory with a keg of beer aboard. The ice-cold, foaming liquid was poured on the flames and the fire extinguished. It was then brought to a garage in this city for repairs.

Enthusiastic Owners Have Suggested Many Automobile Changes

(By John N. Willys, President of the Willys-Overland Company.)

The advent of the woman motor car driver and enthusiast has been directly responsible for many of the changes, in the way of improvements, which have taken place in the construction of automobiles during the last few years. The influence exerted by women in the purchase of a car is a recognized fact and the manufacturer who is fortunate enough to build a product which will measure up to feminine requirements is assured of a ready market for his automobiles.

To begin with, few men decide on a car before first consulting the women members of their families, or their wives or sweethearts, as the case may be. Experience has taught them that, as a rule, a woman's judgment is worth careful consideration before an investment of this kind is made. Where a man is often careless about minor details of the car's construction, a woman is often most particular. She will, for instance, detect a poor color scheme the moment she sees an automobile, if it is defective in that respect, and if any other part of the body construction does not harmonize with the general design, she will discover that imperfection much more quickly than the average man would. And, unless that trouble is remedied, she will not be slow in transferring her affections to some other make of car.

More than one automobile dealer has lost the sale of a car because the make of machine which he handled did not answer those finer requirements in beauty and harmony which are so appealing to the feminine mind. No matter how sterling may be the qualities of that automobile, its general appearance must satisfy the critical eyes of the woman who is looking it over, before she will indorse its purchase. In our own factory, our engineers have been instructed to design the various models not only for men, but for the women. They have retained all the durability and mechanical perfections of the modern, high-grade automobile and at the same time incorporated those finer touches on the Overland which will suit the most exacting demands of the women drivers. Besides beauty in design, luxury in the fittings and efficient service qualities, such as power and speed, have been added the most advanced but simple methods of operation. All the indicating devices, so important to the driver, are within easy range of the driver's eye. Also there is the convenient, left-hand drive with right-hand control. In fact, all of the essential parts necessary to driving the car are attached to the steering column with adjustable foot pedals, making it possible for even a child to drive the machine.

In my opinion, those little details, designed especially for the women, are in a large way responsible for the enormous production and sales of the Overland cars. The time has passed when a woman driver had to depend on the electric vehicle. Mechanical starting devices and the countless other improvements in the construction of Overlands have made it possible for any woman to drive the gasoline pleasure car, the advantages of which surpass those of the electric in every particular.

BOYS ON BORDER ARE REALIZING GRAVITY OF THE SITUATION

Giving an intimate insight into the feelings of the boys on the border is the following letter from Sergeant H. M. Mason, son of Mr. and Mrs. B. R. Mason of this city, addressed to his mother:

Did you get my McAllen paper? Real nice little place, this, but listen: when I get home again don't EVER let me [illegible]. I am getting along fine; never felt better in all my life and [illegible] I'm here to fight for Old Glory if it becomes necessary, but as soon as they find out it won't be necessary—or as soon as we whip Mexico and settle the whole business—I'll be ready to come home to stay.

Monday Night—Taps sounded before I finished last night, and I've been busy all day. The situation looks grave tonight. It grows worse every day. The signal corps received messages today that between six and seven thousand of Carranza's troops were being concentrated at Reyonosa (eight miles from here) planning to attack Hidalgo, Mission, McAllen and Pharr before the rest of the guard reaches here. But we are ready for them and after we drive them across we will proceed to take Reyonosa. (You'll have to get a map to keep up with your son after two or three days, I'm afraid).

All railroads are holding up regular trains and are giving troop trains the right of way. I hope they can hold things up until they get here. Things may "open up" most any time now and Texas will lead the way.

If only President Wilson could avert this awful thing it would save many a life. It is going to be a great deal harder than people think, and some of us won't come back—your son will, though; don't you worry about that.

Do the people back there really appreciate what we are doing for them here? Why don't they send us more recruits? We need them badly. Are we going to be the only ones to push Old Glory across Mexico?

Wish I could get a furlough long enough to come back there for a day. Should anything happen to you back there don't wait too long to let me know, for it would take a week for me to get a release. Lots of love,

H. M. MASON,
Sergt. Company M, Second Infantry.

Chamber of Commerce Directors

R. E. PELLOW.

R. E. Pellow, not one of Waco's oldest residents, but one of her livest hustlers, has made his impress original, forceful and decided manner since coming to Waco and assuming control of the big Raleigh hotel. Mr. Pellow believes in Waco, and believing in the city has the enthusiasm and the heart to posh its claims before the world—and he also has the opportunity to a marked degree. At the age of eighteen years, Mr. Pellow was appointed chief steward on the flagship of the finest line of passenger steamers at that time sailing the Great Lakes, the position being secured through hard work and constant study of the various duties from cabin boy up. During the winters, when the average steward and purser was enjoying a winter vacation, Pellow was engaged in hotel clerking, kitchen and bakery study from a practical standpoint. At the age of twenty-three he commenced his actual career as hotel manager. Five years ago he acquired, as proprietor, the Hotel Plymouth of Chicago, and later the Parkside hotel at Kewanee, Ill., both of which he still controls; in addition to these last January he acquired a financial interest in the Hotel Raleigh at Waco, and is giving it his personal attention as manager. So thoroughly imbued has Mr. Pellow become with the spirit of Waco, Waco's hospitality, Waco's progressiveness and lovable citizens, that he has decided to remain in Waco as a citizen, to manage the Hotel Raleigh and concentrate his best efforts here. This means much for Waco, but again vindicates the foresight and discrimination of Mr. Pellow. He has made arrangements whereby his interests in Chicago will be well looked after, while concentrating in Waco. During the past ten years, Mr. Pellow has been pleasantly and actively interested in and a member of the Columbus, Ohio, Chamber of Commerce; the organizer of the Appleton, Wisconsin, Boosters' Club; the Trinidad Commercial Club; the Edgewater Business Men's Club of Chicago, and the Greater Des Moines Club. This shows that Mr. Pellow has been active, and he has demonstrated what he can do since he came to Waco. The Chamber of Commerce is fortunate in having him as one of the directors.

BURNING FORD ON PUBLIC ROAD SAVED BY A KEG OF BEER

Slightly disabled and hardly fit for racing, but still able to hobble along, a Ford car made its way into Waco yesterday afternoon for repairs. It had been saved from destruction by fire as if by a miracle—by a keg of beer. The car belonged to W. M. Thompson of Hubbard and was being driven by C. C. Thompson near Tehuacana when it caught fire. The occupants made a valiant fight for the car with the meager resources at hand. They were attempting to smoulder out the fire with their coats when a second Ford rolled into sight headed toward prohibition territory with a keg of beer aboard. The ice-cold, foaming liquid was poured on the flames and the fire extinguished. It was then brought to a garage in this city for repairs.

Enthusiastic Owners Have Suggested Many Automobile Changes

(By John N. Willys, President of the Willys-Overland Company.)

The advent of the woman motor car driver and enthusiast has been directly responsible for many of the changes, in the way of improvements, which have taken place in the construction of automobiles during the last few years. The influence exerted by women in the purchase of a car is a recognized fact and the manufacturer who is fortunate enough to build a product which will measure up to feminine requirements is assured of a ready market for his automobiles.

To begin with, few men decide on a car before first consulting the women members of their families, or their wives or sweethearts, as the case may be. Experience has taught them that, as a rule, a woman's judgment is worth careful consideration before an investment of this kind is made. Where a man is often careless about minor details of the car's construction, a woman is often most particular. She will, for instance, detect a poor color scheme the moment she sees an automobile, if it is defective in that respect, and if any other part of the body construction does not harmonize with the general design, she will discover that imperfection much more quickly than the average man would. And, unless that trouble is remedied, she will not be slow in transferring her affections to some other make of car.

More than one automobile dealer has lost the sale of a car because the make of machine which he handled did not answer those finer requirements in beauty and harmony which are so appealing to the feminine mind. No matter how sterling may be the qualities of that automobile, its general appearance must satisfy the critical eyes of the woman who is looking it over, before she will indorse its purchase. In our own factory, our engineers have been instructed to design the various models not only for men, but for the women. Mechanical starting devices and the countless other improvements in the construction of Overlands have made it possible for any woman to drive the gasoline pleasure car, the advantages of which surpass those of the electric in every particular.

BEAUTY PARLOR WILL BE OPENED JULY 6TH AT SANGER BROTHERS

Following the progressive methods so characteristic of the Sanger store, a beauty parlor will be another link added to the already long chain of varied departments. In putting in this new department, Asher Sanger, the store's superintendent, said nothing was left undone, no expense spared to make this a beauty parlor that Waco citizens and public generally could point to with pride. In order to supply the new department with pure artesian water, which is a most important feature, it was necessary for the firm to install a special tower tank on top of the building which will supply pure, fresh artesian water in an unlimited quantity. The announcement of the opening of Sanger's new beauty parlor will bring delight to thousands of Waco citizens and those of adjacent towns. A beauty parlor is no longer regarded as a fad, but a necessity, combining healthful feature as well as personal adornment.

The opening of the beauty parlor is announced for Wednesday, July 6, and with Madam Schuh in charge is a guarantee of its popularity and success, as the madam's reputation as an artiste has been demonstrated already as second to none. Wednesday is the opening day and all are cordially invited to come and inspect the new feature that promises to be a great drawing card for the Sanger store.

Rebekah President Heads Outing for Orphans

Mrs. J. C. Brown of Tyler, president of the Rebekah assembly of Texas, spent yesterday in Waco and will today go to Corsicana, where she will join the Odd Fellows' Home Boys' band and the Girls' orchestra and take them to San Gabriel for a picnic on July 4.

The band and orchestra of the Odd Fellows' Orphans' home have been invited by the San Gabriel lodge to enjoy a picnic at the beautiful lake a few miles east of Georgetown, and it is for the purpose of chaperoning this jolly and happy throng that Mrs. Brown goes to Corsicana today. They will leave tomorrow for San Gabriel, but will stop tomorrow night in Taylor, by invitation, where they will be entertained, going on Tuesday to San Gabriel, where the picnic is to be held July 4.

Mrs. Brown said yesterday that the Rebekahs in Texas are prospering, and that reports have been of the most encouraging character.

The following books are not all devoted to the subject of outdoor sports, but all of them will appeal to the healthy, normal boy, who likes outdoor life. They may be borrowed from the public library, which is located at Twelfth and Austin streets:

Leslie Stegall Has Proved Highly Efficient Constable

"From president to constable" the people will vote this year. This reminds us that precinct No. 1, McLennan county, has a faithful constable in Leslie Stegall, who is a candidate to succeed himself and whose friends are freely predicting a return to this position by a strong majority. Leslie Stegall is efficient to the highest degree, is a thoroughly experienced and seasoned peace officer with an unparalleled record in handling wrongdoers and court papers coming within the jurisdiction of the constabulary.

Leslie Stegall is known throughout this entire section as one of the most courteous constables that ever served a people and his ffriends are numbered by the thousands, who express themselves as unanimously in favor of his retention as constable of precinot No. 1.

Leslie Stegall has taken a prominent part in those movements for the material advancement of this section; he has surrounded himself with a most capable set of deputies and as it is figured there is no real cause for a change in the constabulary here. Hence Mr. Stegall is meeting with the glad hand everywhere he goes within his bailiwick, and in return for this the people are given assurance that the office will be bestowed upon a most appreciative fellow, who is ever doing his full duty fearlessly, and who is recognized as one of the best peace officers in the state and has on more than one occasion been commended for the high efficiency maintained in the constable's office.—Political Advertisement.

Houston Rabbi Will Speak This Evening at Synagogue

Shmulewitz of Congregation Adath Yeshurun, Houston, Texas, who is well known among Texas Jews as a great scholar in Hebrew as well as secular learning, a talented writer and very brilliant lecturer in Yiddish, as well as in English, will deliver, at Congregation Agudath Jacob, Seventh and Columbus streets, this afternoon at 4:30 o'clock, a lecture in English on "Israel Among the Nations." Any one attending this lecture will surely have such spiritual gratification that he will not forget it soon.

"We are especially anxious that the younger people of the city come to hear the rabbi, as he is a great worker among the young people. Please come and bring your friends."

CONSIDER PLAN OF RAILROAD TO LINK BEAUMONT TO WACO

It is stated reliably that there is a movement under way at Beaumont which may mean the heading toward Waco of a new railroad, and the same authority states that $100,000 has been raised to put the project under way, the intention being to build a part of the road, bond it and get money to build another stretch, and then bond that, repeating this performance until the line reaches the point desired.

The information comes to the Chamber of Commerce and is probably correct. The intention is to build the first link of the line from Beaumont to Saratoga, west of Beaumont, taking up a tram road in the operation; then to build to Livingston, picking up another section of tram road on this stretch, and at Livingston a connection is formed with the Beaumont and Great Northern, now controlled by the Katy, and this line would put the road up to Trinity, where the country toward Waco would lie open and inviting for further construction.

It is believed that right of way and bonuses can be secured which will make the proposition an attractive one for promotion. Prominent and active business men are behind the matter, and it is proposed to push it if this be possible until the line is an actuality.

Waco has long wanted this great line, and the whole country en route will do all that is asked, within reason, to secure it.

Toby-Appelquist.

Yesterday, July 1, at 2:15 p. m., at Columbus Street church, Edward Toby and Miss Celia Appelquist were quietly married. Rev. F. S. Groner officiated. Directly after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Toby took the Katy Texas Special for St. Louis, Chicago, Niagara and points on the Great Lakes. They will be absent about a month.

Considerable Interest Shown In Patriotic Race Meeting

Ever since Bob Nickels announced races for the Fourth of July there has been a great deal of interest taken in the coming meet and the indications now are that from all sections of Central Texas there will be visitors here for the event.

Next to a circus, races attract the people. The test of speed between horses of good breeding and which have been well trained, is exciting, and it is a class of sport that draws every character of man. In these days and times when the best horse wins and there is no jockeying for the result, people like to watch the contenders.

The Cotton Palace track is a good one. It was laid under the most favorable weather conditions, it was worked under an exact system, and it has proved to be one of the best speedways ever constructed in Texas. It is capable of allowing fast time, and the races which were held last year gave every satisfaction to those who attended.

There is to be no Fourth of July celebration here; it will be a holiday and everyone will want some place to go. With the baseball team absent, the race track is bound to be the center of attraction for the afternoon.

Yesterday the horses at the track were put through their workouts. Some jogged the track, while others were taken around with the clock to see what they can do now that the summer weather is upon them. Trainers are working with them every day and there are quite a number of visitors to the stables to look "'em over" so as to judge what there is in Texas at this time.

Horses have been brought here from Lohisiana, San Saba, Marlin, Temple, Hillsboro and other places and there will be quite a number of entries for each event, the card carrying two harness and two running events for Tuesday and the same for Wednesday, the intention being to carry the meeting over for a second day.

Railroads are all giving excursion rates for July Fourth, and there will be hourly service on the interurban from all points. It is believed there will be many visitors here from out of the city.

This race meeting is not a money making affair. In order to take care of the expenses of the meeting there will be admission fee of fifty cents, with children from eight to twelve years twenty-five cents, while children under eight will be free. The grand stand will be free to everyone.

The grand stand at the Cotton Palace is one of the comfortable sight-seeing stands in Texas. It is so constructed that it has a good view of the entire track from start to finish, and it faces the south so as to get the comfortable breeze of the afternoon.

One of the important features of this meeting is that it occurs the week before the meeting at Mart. The horsemen want to go a few strides on the track before the Mart meeting so as to see just how their horses will go in the summer time.

Bob Nickels has been working hard to make this event a success. He is getting the men together at the track, and there will be a high class entertainment for everyone.

Whitson Lodge to Have Annual W. O. W. Picnic

The Whitson W. O. W. lodge will have its annual W. O. W. picnic at Neff's park, Halbert's bridge, located seven miles west of Moody and ten miles south of McGregor on Leon river, on July 6 and 7. There will be speaking by R. M. Hayes, district deputy W. O. W., Hon. Pat M. Neff, Hon. Tom McCullough, Hon Tom Connally and others. Also every amusement that makes a picnic enjoyable to all. Everybody invited to come.

It Is the Unexpected

That's seen in our aggregation of food specialties. A jollier collection of surprises cannot well be imagined than our cans and jars and boxes of tempting delicacies, which would whet an epicure's jaded appetite. Mere words and glances cannot describe what appeals exclusively to the taste. The banquet is ready. Don't stay away from the feast.

"A Trip Through the Factory"

NO. 6

Answering some of the questions frequently asked by subscribers concerning the working of a telephone exchange.

15. "Since your new switchboard was installed I can hear the operator ringing the party I am calling. Is something wrong with my telephone?"

No. This is an "audible ring" that is purposely intended to be heard by the calling subscriber. Then you know the operator is actually calling someone for you, because you can hear the rings yourself.

The reason for this system is that it eliminates complaints from subscribers that "the operator never even rung them—I know they would have answered if she had called them."

Now you KNOW the operator is calling them; the company wants you to know it—therefore the "audible ring."

BAYLOR IS HAVING AN ACTIVE SUMMER

OFFICIALS ARE WELL PLEASED WITH THE SUMMER ENROLLMENT.

TOTAL OF 1,608 STUDENTS

Last Year Was a Very Enterprising Session With University—Many Activities Now.

The Baylor authorities announce this week that they are very much pleased with the large enrollment of the summer school, which is now above 625. The machinery of the school has been working unusually well, due to the extensive plans which had been previously made for the summer. More than four hundred of these are enrolled in the regular summer work, the others being normal students.

Plans for the coming session of 1916-17 are already being made. Reports from the management of the young ladies' dormitories state that an unusually large number are reserving rooms several months in advance. Many catalogues are being sent by request to interested patrons and prospective students over the state. The present flourishing condition of crops also lends its influence, and if the period of prosperity continues the enrollment this fall will probably be a record one. A pamphlet which has just been issued by the university shows the total enrollment for the past year to have been 1,608, of which number 228 were in the academy.

An effort is now being made to secure a full set of Browning first editions for the benefit of the English department, in order that advanced work of the highest quality may be done here by Browning students. In spite of their high cost and scarcity, some of the numbers have been already secured. Members of the English department are interested in the fact that Mr. Dodd of the Dodd Mead Publishing company has recently brought over the most precious collection of Browning material which has ever come into America. He holds it for $56,000.

MOTHER GOOSE PAGEANT GIVEN.

One of the most delightful campus entertainments of the season was the Mother Goose pageant, which was given Friday evening at 6:30 o'clock. This was the third presentation of this charming little entertainment by the pupils in Miss Lillie Martin's model school. It had been given twice in the early spring, once before a large crowd of visitors, and once in chapel before the students. A large crowd gathered Friday some minutes before the time set for the beginning, in order to be sure that they would not miss any word of this delightful treat, the reputation of which had been spread over the city by the two previous performances. The first part of the program consisted of the singing of several Mother Goose rhymes, such as "Twinkle, Twinkle Little Star," by the members of the model class. Each child was in appropriate costume, and represented one of the members of the large Mother Goose family. The childish, but very musical rendering of the nursery rhymes was greeted with much applause. Then followed a solo and a duet, consisting of Mother Goose rhymes cleverly adapted to music, which were delightfully rendered by three of the young children of the class.

Miss Eschol Taylor of the fine arts department, who was at the piano, gave as the second portion of the program, a paper on the origin of the Mother Goose rhymes, and concerning the part which they have played in the development of literature intended primarily for small children.

When the third part of the program opened Mary was to be seen in her garden, attempting to plant her rose bush. Then each of the children representing one of the well-known characters in the rhymes, passed by and chatted with her for a minute. Among them were the old woman who lived in a shoe, little Tommy Tucker, Little Red Riding Hood, Mother Hubbard with her poor dog in search of a bone, and others of the nursery favorites, even to Humpty-Dumpty and Jack and Jill, with their appropriate wrappings of brown paper to heal their wounds and bruises. Particularly noticeable was the clearness and expressiveness of the children's voices, which could be heard distinctly everywhere in the audience. This was doubly notable because that all of those taking part were very young—five, six and seven years of age. The out-of-door presentation gave charm to the midget pageant, and a spot was selected on the campus which gave a cool shade and a beautiful natural setting. Miss Martin, the children, and their parents were all the recipients of congratulations and words of appreciation from the students and visitors who made up the audience.

MODEL SCHOOL BUILDING COMPLETED.

Baylor people and patrons of the model school are delighted with the new building which has just been completed. It gives much more room for the children and an opportunity to provide many helps and conveniences heretofore impossible. Those who are studying primary methods under Miss Martin are glad of the opportunities offered for observation, which is so important in acquiring a knowledge of primary methods. The new building is cool, well ventilated, and very tastefully and attractively finished and furnished, both inside and out.

The chapel talks for the summer are proving of interest to a number of the students in the normal and summer school. Among those of last week were:

"A Sense of Humor as a Necessary Asset for the Public School Teacher," Supt. B. B. Cobb.

"How to Study," Principal Flanniken of the Eighth street ward school.

"The Value of a High School Library," Librarian W. P. Lewis of the Baylor library.

"A Story—the Dream of the Bees," Dean J. L. Kesler.

On Monday Supt. J. E. Watts of the Cameron public schools, will speak. On Friday morning Prof. H. Trantham will give a short talk on various aspects of life in England, which will supplement his stereopticon lecture of Thursday evening. Other interesting speakers will be provided from the faculty and other sources for the other days of the week. The chapel exercises are held at 9:30 every morning, and visitors are always welcome.

SPECIAL FEATURES FOR COMING WEEK.

On the evening of July 4, Miss Nellie Lee Hill, a talented student from the department of expression, will read Maurice Maeterlinck's "Blue Bird." Miss Hill, who lives in Waco, has many friends who will be delighted at this opportunity to attend one of her readings, which they have found invariably so artistic and entertaining. In addition to excellent training, she has natural ability of high order, and has become very well known as a gifted reader in Baylor circles. She has twice read the "Blue Bird" before the class in contemporary drama, and has been received with unusual favor. Maeterlinck is one of the best known of modern dramatists, and his "Blue Bird" is probably his best known work. It shows quite typically the genius of the man and at the same time provides, either on the stage or as a reading, a very profitable and enjoyable evening's entertainment. The reading will begin promptly at 6:45.

A stereopticon lecture on English and Oxford will be given Thursday evening by Prof. H. Trantham. Professor Trantham, who is the head of the Greek department, spent three years in England as a Rhodes scholar at Oxford, and is exceptionally well qualified to speak on his subject. His talks to the students on several occasions have proved him a very interesting, easy speaker and many students will undoubtedly be present to hear him. Professor Trantham has kept in rather close touch with Oxford affairs since leaving the university, and he will be prepared to bring all of his remarks well up to date. A set of beautiful colored slides will be used to illustrate the lecture, which will be held at 8:15.

The customary story hour and singing of melodies and college songs will be held Friday evening on the campus at 6:45. The full program will be announced later.

HOLIDAY ON JULY FOURTH.

The Fourth of July will be a holiday for the students and teachers in both normal and summer school. There will be no special exercises in chapel as has been the custom at times, but each student will be left free to observe the day as he or she sees fit. Small picnic parties and attending special exercises in other parts of the city will probably find favor with the majority.

Within the next two or three weeks, probably during the fifth week of summer school, the annual watermelon cutting will be held on the campus. Several hundred iced melons will be provided and this has become one of the chief social events of the summer quarter.

Overtures have been made recently to bring to Waco Charles W. Wallace, who has done more for the promotion of Shakspere research than any other man of modern times. His coming would be a notable event to all who are interested in Shakspere and in English literature.

In spite of the downpour Tuesday evening, Prof. Anton Navratil's violin recital drew an unusually large crowd this week. His popularity with Waco people was made very evident by the spontaneous and continued applause which followed every number.

Personal Items.

A large number of Baylor people are taking their vacation in Palacios this summer.

Dr. Emmett Reid, former professor of chemistry in Baylor, and now associate professor of organic chemistry in Johns Hopkins university, will spend the summer at Jersey City, where he will be engaged in research work for the Colgate Soap and Perfumery company.

The recent death of Mrs. Ethel Bolton Savely recalls her splendid enthusiasm for literature during the short time in which she was a student in Baylor.

James Jenkins, '12, who is a national vice president of the Baraca movement, has been in Minneapolis for some weeks at the Baraca World-wide convention. After leaving Minneapolis he is to spend some time visiting various cities in New York state.

Mrs. Collins, the effective manager of the cafeteria, left Saturday for New York City, where she will spend some weeks in study which will fit her for the best possible work in the Baylor "Caf."

Mrs. T. H. Claypool of the Burleson-Brooks hall, has given up her plans for going to Columbia university for the summer term. She has not yet definitely decided where she will spend her vacation.

Letters from Mr. and Mrs. S. R. Spencer state that they are settled in Chicago for the summer and that Mr. Spencer is busily engaged in his work in the university there.

Mrs. J. W. Harrell of the Houston and Cowden halls, has as her guest for the summer, her niece from Cameron, Miss Margaret Terry.

E. D. Head, '16, has accepted a position as full time pastor of the Valley Mills Baptist church. In order to take this work he has resigned his position as teacher of the Bible in the academy, and also as the holder of the Burleson fellowship in English for the coming year. The fellowship vacancy will be filled at some time in the near future.

Prof. T. H. Claypool has gone on an auto trip through the country to Marble Falls, Texas, where he will visit his mother.

Prof. J. B. Tidwell of South Eighth street, head of the department of Bible, will spend the summer in Alabama.

Paul Porter, '15, who has been a student in Brown university graduate school this year, as one of the Marston scholars from Baylor, has returned to Waco. He will teach mathematics in Rusk Baptist academy during the coming year.

J. R. Collier of the board of trustees has been quite ill, but many friends will be glad to hear of his rapid recovery. He has had as his guest during the past week W. H. McBride of Tyler, Texas.

John E. Lattimore, '12, has returned from Galveston, where he received his degree this year in the state medical college. He came by way of Austin, where he passed his examination before the state board of medical examiners. He will enter the Providence sanitarium of this city as an interne.

SPECIAL SUNDAY DINNERS 50c

Chamber Commerce Bringing Country People and Urbanites Into Much Closer Relations

Through the work of the Chamber of Commerce, during the last week, speakers were furnished for the annual livestock show at Riesel, Wednesday and Thursday, and the success of this first co-operative meeting between town and country is very gratifying to the board of directors of the organization.

It will be remembered that the announcement was recently made that the reorganized commercial body proposes to bring the rural folks and the town folks together. The effort is to eliminate the Mason and Dixon line that has existed for so many years, an imaginary line that has extended about the city at the limits, a line which every one recognized as soon as he crossed it. The rural folks felt that when they came to town they were coming to another section and the town folks when going to the country would feel they were in another region altogether. The Chamber of Commerce knows that such conditions and differences do not exist. The town cannot succeed without the country; the country cannot be prosperous and well served without the facilities of the town. There is no dividing line. The business men of the country produce and market the products of the earth. The business men of the town buy and sell, extend favors, furnish information, provide facilities of communication and work for co-operative benefits. The people of the county are one people, in the minds of the Chamber of Commerce folk, and they have found out that they have only to suggest it and the people of the rural districts agree to it as a fact.

CHAMBER PROVIDES SPEAKERS.

The Chamber of Commerce recently announced that speakers would be provided on any subject at any time when the request is made. The first request came from Riesel for the stock show, and Wednesday and Thursday were the dates fixed. The reports from Riesel are that the people there were well pleased with the results that were obtained.

One of the speakers was Superintendent B. B. Cobb of the Waco public schools. Mr. Cobb came to Waco from Marshall where had been for years in school work and he came well supported by the opinions of the best university men in Texas that he was a thoroughly capable school man. He has taken charge of the Waco schools and has made a success of his work here. Having come from the small community to the large, and being in touch when he lived in Harrison county, with the rural conditions which have ever been a study for him from a professional standpoint, he went to Riesel well qualified to talk to the people there, and he made an excellent address.

COBB IS SPEAKER ON EDUCATION.

Mr. Cobb said the people were not alive to the importance of education, when they overlooked the opportunities that were afforded them through the educational laws of the state; each community can have as good facilities as the best community in the county, if the people will but decide to do so; it is a local matter, pure and simple; the laws leave it to the people themselves whether they want to take care of their schools good, bad or indifferently. Too much attention, he said, is being paid to direct money-making efforts and too little to the future results that will come from properly educating the growing youth, both boys and girls. That which is invested in education pays dividends in the character of the citizenship that is thus formed. He told of conditions of his own knowledge in East Texas where the natives neglected some of the lands, and when folks from the Northwest came among them and bought up these lands the local opinion was that this "stuff was wished on" the stranger, but when the stranger began to apply the methods he had learned before he came to Texas, he made a success and within a few years was employing the natives at $1.25 a day to gather his crop for him. Education gives children a knowledge and an understanding and it is worth a great deal to the mature man and woman. Mr. Cobb made a strong plea for educational improvement. He urged the people to invest in schools, to build good houses for teachers and children, employ good teachers, provide all facilities for instruction and learning, and the children would be glad to take advantage of what they were given.

SECURE A. & M. LECTURER.

Dr. Harkey from the A. & M. college of Texas discussed fertile and infertile eggs. He came to the Riesel show at the request of the Chamber of Commerce of Waco, and made a strong talk. His explanation of the safety and continued freshness of the infertile egg was presented in such strong light that the people became at once interested and after his talk many came to him to see his specimens and to ask further questions. He outlined the egg circle movement by which members agree to produce eggs in a poultry yard in which there is no male bird, and to market them through the officers of the association, and the system was of much interest. The probable result of this talk is that an egg circle will be organized there, as the people of that section are thrifty and will follow the advice given.

DISTRIBUTE BOLL WEEVIL LEAFLETS.

J. A. Pipkin, county demonstration agent, who is to have his office with the Chamber of Commerce after the new building is occupied, made a talk to the gathered crowd at the fair on agricultural subjects and especially about the boll weevil, and urged the people to follow the instruction of the A. & M. college on how to combat the pest. The Chamber of Commerce of Waco circulated 1,000 leaflets on the boll weevil subject, this leaflet being reprinted in Waco from the instructions sent out by T. O. Walton of the A. & M. college of Texas.

T. P. Duncan made a speech also to the meeting on the subject of co-operation between the town and the country. Mr. Duncan stressed the desire of the town people to be of any help possible to the people of the rural precincts. He said that Waco wants to be a market for what is produced hereabouts and wants to provide whatever facilities are needed by the people in the country. He urged the people to come individually, in pairs or in parties to the Chamber of Commerce to state their wants, and if it is within the power of the Chamber of Commerce to do it, it will be done.

WINDROW TELLS OF ROADS.

One of the most interesting talks of the two days was that by Rollin J. Windrow, county engineer. Mr. Windrow stated that while he came to the meeting at the request of the Chamber of Commerce, he was the engineer of all the county and he is ready to respond at any time to a request from any community for a talk on good roads and on the system that is being followed in this county. He outlined the work that has been done under the present system and under the old, and made the statement that the saving that has been made on bridges under the present system has been more than enough to pay the expenses of the county engineer's department. Mr. Windrow told the people to look back over the fifty years of work under the system of free work by road overseers and compare the results with the two years under an engineer. Mr. Windrow said that when he came into the engineer's office the county had no records of road work or of roads, but that now the county records show all the roads, all the work done, all the materials used, etc. He emphasized also the fact that under the new system of employed labor, working under the direction of the engineer, the cost to the taxpayers had been less than when there was free labor and overseers. In other words, that with no advance in the tax rate, and no change in the amount set aside for the road and bridge fund, the employed labor had done more work than the free labor. He explained the methods by which materials are bought in carload lots and money saved, and he outlined the system by which the county is divided into seventeen sections, where work is done every day of each week on the roads. He said that the foreman of every road outfit has a telephone in his home so that he can be called by the county engineer or by any citizen at any time to do emergency work. He stated that weekly reports are received from each camp showing the work done on the roads and that the county engineer personally inspects the work every week.

Mr. Windrow's address was interesting and was given close attention.

J. F. Burton presided at the meetings at Riesel.

TODAY'S BEAUTY TALK

You can make a delightful shampoo with very little effort and for a very trifling cost, if you get from your druggist a package of canthrox and dissolve a teaspoonful in a cup of hot water. Your shampoo is now ready. Just pour a little at a time on the scalp and rub briskly. This creates an abundance of thick, white lather that thoroughly dissolves and removes the dandruff, excess oil and dirt. After rinsing, the hair dries quickly, with a fluffiness that makes it seem heavier than it is, and takes on a rich luster and a softness that makes arranging it a pleasure.

Answering some of the questions frequently asked by subscribers concerning the working of a telephone exchange.

15. "Since your new switchboard was installed I can hear the operator ringing the party I am calling. Is something wrong with my telephone?"

No. This is an "audible ring" that is purposely intended to be heard by the calling subscriber. Then you know the operator is actually calling someone for you, because you can hear the rings yourself.

The reason for this system is that it eliminates complaints from subscribers that "the operator never even rung them—I know they would have answered if she had called them."

Now you KNOW the operator is calling them; the company wants you to know it—therefore the "audible ring."

BAYLOR IS HAVING AN ACTIVE SUMMER

Last Year Was a Very Enterprising Session With University—Many Activities Now.

The Baylor authorities announce this week that they are very much pleased with the large enrollment of the summer school, which is now above 625. The machinery of the school has been working unusually well, due to the extensive plans which had been previously made for the summer. More than four hundred of these are enrolled in the regular summer work, the others being normal students.

Plans for the coming session of 1916-17 are already being made. Reports from the management of the young ladies' dormitories state that an unusually large number are reserving rooms several months in advance. Many catalogues are being sent by request to interested patrons and prospective students over the state. The present flourishing condition of crops also lends its influence, and if the period of prosperity continues the enrollment this fall will probably be a record one. A pamphlet which has just been issued by the university shows the total enrollment for the past year to have been 1,608, of which number 228 were in the academy.

An effort is now being made to secure a full set of Browning first editions for the benefit of the English department, in order that advanced work of the highest quality may be done here by Browning students. In spite of their high cost and scarcity, some of the numbers have been already secured. Members of the English department are interested in the fact that Mr. Dodd of the Dodd Mead Publishing company has recently brought over the most precious collection of Browning material which has ever come into America. He holds it for $56,000.

MOTHER GOOSE PAGEANT GIVEN.

One of the most delightful campus entertainments of the season was the Mother Goose pageant, which was given Friday evening at 6:30 o'clock. This was the third presentation of this charming little entertainment by the pupils in Miss Lillie Martin's model school. It had been given twice in the early spring, once before a large crowd of visitors, and once in chapel before the students. A large crowd gathered Friday some minutes before the time set for the beginning, in order to be sure that they would not miss any word of this delightful treat, the reputation of which had been spread over the city by the two previous performances. The first part of the program consisted of the singing of several Mother Goose rhymes, such as "Twinkle, Twinkle Little Star," by the members of the model class. Each child was in appropriate costume, and represented one of the members of the large Mother Goose family. The childish, but very musical rendering of the nursery rhymes was greeted with much applause. Then followed a solo and a duet, consisting of Mother Goose rhymes cleverly adapted to music, which were delightfully rendered by three of the young children of the class.

Miss Eschol Taylor of the fine arts department, who was at the piano, gave as the second portion of the program, a paper on the origin of the Mother Goose rhymes, and concerning the part which they have played in the development of literature intended primarily for small children.

When the third part of the program opened Mary was to be seen in her garden, attempting to plant her rose bush. Then each of the children representing one of the well-known characters in the rhymes, passed by and chatted with her for a minute. Among them were the old woman who lived in a shoe, little Tommy Tucker, Little Red Riding Hood, Mother Hubbard with her poor dog in search of a bone, and others of the nursery favorites, even to Humpty-Dumpty and Jack and Jill, with their appropriate wrappings of brown paper to heal their wounds and bruises. Particularly noticeable was the clearness and expressiveness of the children's voices, which could be heard distinctly everywhere in the audience. This was doubly notable because that all of those taking part were very young—five, six and seven years of age. The out-of-door presentation gave charm to the midget pageant, and a spot was selected on the campus which gave a cool shade and a beautiful natural setting. Miss Martin, the children, and their parents were all the recipients of congratulations and words of appreciation from the students and visitors who made up the audience.

MODEL SCHOOL BUILDING COMPLETED.

Baylor people and patrons of the model school are delighted with the new building which has just been completed. It gives much more room for the children and an opportunity to provide many helps and conveniences heretofore impossible. Those who are studying primary methods under Miss Martin are glad of the opportunities offered for observation, which is so important in acquiring a knowledge of primary methods. The new building is cool, well ventilated, and very tastefully and attractively finished and furnished, both inside and out.

The chapel talks for the summer are proving of interest to a number of the students in the normal and summer school. Among those of last week were:

"A Sense of Humor as a Necessary Asset for the Public School Teacher," Supt. B. B. Cobb.

"How to Study," Principal Flanniken of the Eighth street ward school.

"The Value of a High School Library," Librarian W. P. Lewis of the Baylor library.

"A Story—the Dream of the Bees," Dean J. L. Kesler.

On Monday Supt. J. E. Watts of the Cameron public schools, will speak. On Friday morning Prof. H. Trantham will give a short talk on various aspects of life in England, which will supplement his stereopticon lecture of Thursday evening. Other interesting speakers will be provided from the faculty and other sources for the other days of the week. The chapel exercises are held at 9:30 every morning, and visitors are always welcome.

SPECIAL FEATURES FOR COMING WEEK.

On the evening of July 4, Miss Nellie Lee Hill, a talented student from the department of expression, will read Maurice Maeterlinck's "Blue Bird." Miss Hill, who lives in Waco, has many friends who will be delighted at this opportunity to attend one of her readings, which they have found invariably so artistic and entertaining. In addition to excellent training, she has natural ability of high order, and has become very well known as a gifted reader in Baylor circles. She has twice read the "Blue Bird" before the class in contemporary drama, and has been received with unusual favor. Maeterlinck is one of the best known of modern dramatists, and his "Blue Bird" is probably his best known work. It shows quite typically the genius of the man and at the same time provides, either on the stage or as a reading, a very profitable and enjoyable evening's entertainment. The reading will begin promptly at 6:45.

A stereopticon lecture on English and Oxford will be given Thursday evening by Prof. H. Trantham. Professor Trantham, who is the head of the Greek department, spent three years in England as a Rhodes scholar at Oxford, and is exceptionally well qualified to speak on his subject. His talks to the students on several occasions have proved him a very interesting, easy speaker and many students will undoubtedly be present to hear him. Professor Trantham has kept in rather close touch with Oxford affairs since leaving the university, and he will be prepared to bring all of his remarks well up to date. A set of beautiful colored slides will be used to illustrate the lecture, which will be held at 8:15.

The customary story hour and singing of melodies and college songs will be held Friday evening on the campus at 6:45. The full program will be announced later.

HOLIDAY ON JULY FOURTH.

The Fourth of July will be a holiday for the students and teachers in both normal and summer school. There will be no special exercises in chapel as has been the custom at times, but each student will be left free to observe the day as he or she sees fit. Small picnic parties and attending special exercises in other parts of the city will probably find favor with the majority.

Within the next two or three weeks, probably during the fifth week of summer school, the annual watermelon cutting will be held on the campus. Several hundred iced melons will be provided and this has become one of the chief social events of the summer quarter.

Overtures have been made recently to bring to Waco Charles W. Wallace, who has done more for the promotion of Shakspere research than any other man of modern times. His coming would be a notable event to all who are interested in Shakspere and in English literature.

In spite of the downpour Tuesday evening, Prof. Anton Navratil's violin recital drew an unusually large crowd this week. His popularity with Waco people was made very evident by the spontaneous and continued applause which followed every number.

Personal Items.

A large number of Baylor people are taking their vacation in Palacios this summer.

Dr. Emmett Reid, former professor of chemistry in Baylor, and now associate professor of organic chemistry in Johns Hopkins university, will spend the summer at Jersey City, where he will be engaged in research work for the Colgate Soap and Perfumery company.

The recent death of Mrs. Ethel Bolton Savely recalls her splendid enthusiasm for literature during the short time in which she was a student in Baylor.

James Jenkins, '12, who is a national vice president of the Baraca movement, has been in Minneapolis for some weeks at the Baraca World-wide convention. After leaving Minneapolis he is to spend some time visiting various cities in New York state.

Mrs. Collins, the effective manager of the cafeteria, left Saturday for New York City, where she will spend some weeks in study which will fit her for the best possible work in the Baylor "Caf."

Mrs. T. H. Claypool of the Burleson-Brooks hall, has given up her plans for going to Columbia university for the summer term. She has not yet definitely decided where she will spend her vacation.

Letters from Mr. and Mrs. S. R. Spencer state that they are settled in Chicago for the summer and that Mr. Spencer is busily engaged in his work in the university there.

Mrs. J. W. Harrell of the Houston and Cowden halls, has as her guest for the summer, her niece from Cameron, Miss Margaret Terry.

E. D. Head, '16, has accepted a position as full time pastor of the Valley Mills Baptist church. In order to take this work he has resigned his position as teacher of the Bible in the academy, and also as the holder of the Burleson fellowship in English for the coming year. The fellowship vacancy will be filled at some time in the near future.

Prof. T. H. Claypool has gone on an auto trip through the country to Marble Falls, Texas, where he will visit his mother.

Prof. J. B. Tidwell of South Eighth street, head of the department of Bible, will spend the summer in Alabama.

Paul Porter, '15, who has been a student in Brown university graduate school this year, as one of the Marston scholars from Baylor, has returned to Waco. He will teach mathematics in Rusk Baptist academy during the coming year.

J. R. Collier of the board of trustees has been quite ill, but many friends will be glad to hear of his rapid recovery. He has had as his guest during the past week W. H. McBride of Tyler, Texas.

John E. Lattimore, '12, has returned from Galveston, where he received his degree this year in the state medical college. He came by way of Austin, where he passed his examination before the state board of medical examiners. He will enter the Providence sanitarium of this city as an interne.

SPECIAL SUNDAY DINNERS 50c

Chamber Commerce Bringing Country People and Urbanites Into Much Closer Relations

Through the work of the Chamber of Commerce, during the last week, speakers were furnished for the annual livestock show at Riesel, Wednesday and Thursday, and the success of this first co-operative meeting between town and country is very gratifying to the board of directors of the organization.

It will be remembered that the announcement was recently made that the reorganized commercial body proposes to bring the rural folks and the town folks together. The effort is to eliminate the Mason and Dixon line that has existed for so many years, an imaginary line that has extended about the city at the limits, a line which every one recognized as soon as he crossed it. The rural folks felt that when they came to town they were coming to another section and the town folks when going to the country would feel they were in another region altogether. The Chamber of Commerce knows that such conditions and differences do not exist. The town cannot succeed without the country; the country cannot be prosperous and well served without the facilities of the town. There is no dividing line. The business men of the country produce and market the products of the earth. The business men of the town buy and sell, extend favors, furnish information, provide facilities of communication and work for co-operative benefits. The people of the county are one people, in the minds of the Chamber of Commerce folk, and they have found out that they have only to suggest it and the people of the rural districts agree to it as a fact.

CHAMBER PROVIDES SPEAKERS.

The Chamber of Commerce recently announced that speakers would be provided on any subject at any time when the request is made. The first request came from Riesel for the stock show, and Wednesday and Thursday were the dates fixed. The reports from Riesel are that the people there were well pleased with the results that were obtained.

One of the speakers was Superintendent B. B. Cobb of the Waco public schools. Mr. Cobb came to Waco from Marshall where had been for years in school work and he came well supported by the opinions of the best university men in Texas that he was a thoroughly capable school man. He has taken charge of the Waco schools and has made a success of his work here. Having come from the small community to the large, and being in touch when he lived in Harrison county, with the rural conditions which have ever been a study for him from a professional standpoint, he went to Riesel well qualified to talk to the people there, and he made an excellent address.

COBB IS SPEAKER ON EDUCATION.

Mr. Cobb said the people were not alive to the importance of education, when they overlooked the opportunities that were afforded them through the educational laws of the state; each community can have as good facilities as the best community in the county, if the people will but decide to do so; it is a local matter, pure and simple; the laws leave it to the people themselves whether they want to take care of their schools good, bad or indifferently. Too much attention, he said, is being paid to direct money-making efforts and too little to the future results that will come from properly educating the growing youth, both boys and girls. That which is invested in education pays dividends in the character of the citizenship that is thus formed. He told of conditions of his own knowledge in East Texas where the natives neglected some of the lands, and when folks from the Northwest came among them and bought up these lands the local opinion was that this "stuff was wished on" the stranger, but when the stranger began to apply the methods he had learned before he came to Texas, he made a success and within a few years was employing the natives at $1.25 a day to gather his crop for him. Education gives children a knowledge and an understanding and it is worth a great deal to the mature man and woman. Mr. Cobb made a strong plea for educational improvement. He urged the people to invest in schools, to build good houses for teachers and children, employ good teachers, provide all facilities for instruction and learning, and the children would be glad to take advantage of what they were given.

SECURE A. & M. LECTURER.

Dr. Harkey from the A. & M. college of Texas discussed fertile and infertile eggs. He came to the Riesel show at the request of the Chamber of Commerce of Waco, and made a strong talk. His explanation of the safety and continued freshness of the infertile egg was presented in such strong light that the people became at once interested and after his talk many came to him to see his specimens and to ask further questions. He outlined the egg circle movement by which members agree to produce eggs in a poultry yard in which there is no male bird, and to market them through the officers of the association, and the system was of much interest. The probable result of this talk is that an egg circle will be organized there, as the people of that section are thrifty and will follow the advice given.

DISTRIBUTE BOLL WEEVIL LEAFLETS.

J. A. Pipkin, county demonstration agent, who is to have his office with the Chamber of Commerce after the new building is occupied, made a talk to the gathered crowd at the fair on agricultural subjects and especially about the boll weevil, and urged the people to follow the instruction of the A. & M. college on how to combat the pest. The Chamber of Commerce of Waco circulated 1,000 leaflets on the boll weevil subject, this leaflet being reprinted in Waco from the instructions sent out by T. O. Walton of the A. & M. college of Texas.

T. P. Duncan made a speech also to the meeting on the subject of co-operation between the town and the country. Mr. Duncan stressed the desire of the town people to be of any help possible to the people of the rural precincts. He said that Waco wants to be a market for what is produced hereabouts and wants to provide whatever facilities are needed by the people in the country. He urged the people to come individually, in pairs or in parties to the Chamber of Commerce to state their wants and if it is within the power of the Chamber of Commerce to do it, it will be done.

WINDROW TELLS OF ROADS.

One of the most interesting talks of the two days was that by Rollin J. Windrow, county engineer. Mr. Windrow stated that while he came to the meeting at the request of the Chamber of Commerce, he was the engineer of all the county and he is ready to respond at any time to a request from any community for a talk on good roads and on the system that is being followed in this county. He outlined the work that has been done under the present system and under the old, and made the statement that the saving that has been made on bridges under the present system has been more than enough to pay the expenses of the county engineer's department. Mr. Windrow told the people to look back over the fifty years of work under the system of free work by road overseers and compare the results with the two years under an engineer. Mr. Windrow said that when he came into the engineer's office the county had no records of road work or of roads, but that now the county records show all the roads, all the work done, all the materials used, etc. He emphasized also the fact that under the new system of employed labor, working under the direction of the engineer, the cost to the taxpayers had been less than when there was free labor and overseers. In other words, that with no advance in the tax rate, and no change in the amount set aside for the road and bridge fund, the employed labor had done more work than the free labor. He explained the methods by which materials are bought in carload lots and money saved, and he outlined the system by which the county is divided into seventeen sections, where work is done every day of each week on the roads. He said that the foreman of every road outfit has a telephone in his home so that he can be called by the county engineer or by any citizen at any time to do emergency work. He stated that weekly reports are received from each camp showing the work done on the roads and that the county engineer personally inspects the work every week.

Mr. Windrow's address was interesting and was given close attention.

J. F. Burton presided at the meetings at Riesel.

TODAY'S BEAUTY TALK

You can make a delightful shampoo with very little effort and for a very trifling cost, if you get from your druggist a package of canthrox and dissolve a teaspoonful in a cup of hot water. Your shampoo is now ready. Just pour a little at a time on the scalp and rub briskly. This creates an abundance of thick, white lather that thoroughly dissolves and removes the dandruff, excess oil and dirt. After rinsing, the hair dries quickly, with a fluffiness that makes it seem heavier than it is, and takes on a rich luster and a softness that makes arranging it a pleasure.

Business About Corner Eighth and Franklin Streets

Although every section of Waco has grown despite the war and other drawbacks of the past three years, yet there are some sections which have progressed faster than others, and in a few sections the changes in the past three years have been really noteworthy.

Such a section is that which centers around Eighth and Franklin streets, and for a block in each direction up and down that thoroughfare there has been a marvelous change in the time mentioned, a change which has been wrought so steadily that many have not realized the full effect on lines of business located in that part of Waco. Up to three years ago the lines of business, most of them, were small, rather inconsequential and struggling; today that section has developed into a business area which is teeming with activity, virile with commercial strength and with a promise of yet greater things to come.

A visit was yesterday paid to that section of the city which has grown so rapidly, and the Morning News man stopped first at the Pipkin & Turner Drug Store, at Eighth and Franklin streets, in the beautiful new (or nearly new) Hill's Business College building, on the northeast corner. This beautiful drug store does not have to take a back seat for anything in Waco with its beautiful tile floor, handsome furnishings and fittings, and with its throngs of people passing in and out continuously. Not only is the cooling fountain drinks a strong attraction, but the drug store in its entirety is a great drawing card for the public. Speaking of the great changes which have taken place and which are pending in that section of the city, Mr. Wm. P. Pipkin said: "In my judgment, no part of Waco has grown and held its own as this section of the city in the past few years. It has grown and gotten better right along through war conditions, and this ought to be an indication of what it is going to do when things get normal. It has come right to the front, and the people can get their wants satisfied by high-class institutions here in any line except dry goods; the service is high class. Then, too, it is safe, as the congestion of Austin street is not noticed here, though we have a good crowd, plenty of life and movement."

Just east of the Hill's Business College building is the Clay Francis Garage, and Mr. Francis' business is another one which is prospering and expanding.

Diagonally across the street from the drug store first mentioned is the new grocery and meat line of J. C. Crippen & Son. This is without doubt one of the prettiest and best appointed places of business of the kind in the city, and the proprietors are simply delighted with this additional location. Speaking yesterday of the location at the southwest corner of Eighth and Franklin streets, Mr. Crippen said: "Yes, we are more than pleased with this place for our business. We knew it was all right, but really did not know that we would start off a business of such magnitude in such a short time. Of course we try to give the people good service, but our location must have its part of the credit for our quick success here. And the location ought to grow better all the time. Our customers are finding out about this second store of ours, and we are having a great business. We do not merely think that this section of Waco has a future, but it has a present, and we are enjoying the benefits of it."

In order to test the feeling still further from the point of Eighth and Franklin, The News man moved on up to Ninth and Franklin streets, in the new two-story building of ornate design erected by W. G. Lacy, the corner store at the northeast corner being occupied by Turner Bros.' high class grocery store. Here the same feeling of optimism prevailed, and Turner Bros. were busy handing out orders and waiting on customers who were coming in. Voicing their sentiments regarding the business, Mr. Turner said: "Yes, we are settled and down to business, and I can tell you we are doing business, too. It is not only that the people know us and know that we run the business to please the public and at attractive prices, but we have certainly made no mistake in our location. Why, it is really astonishing the way conditions have changed in this part of Waco in the past few years; one must be on the ground to realize it. Franklin street is coming into its own right along, and Waco is also growing in spite of war times. Look out for a big forward movement when the war is over. Other property owners up this way are ready to build, and tenants are going to be easy to get a little later. Just keep your eye on this part of the city, for it is certainly coming, and our business is just as satisfactory as it could well be."

Located upstairs in this same W. G. Lacy building is the hustling Shook Rubber Co., wholesale, and the location is a fine one for Mr. Shook and associates.

The other two stores downstairs are occupied by the busy and prosperous Waco Storage Battery Co. and the Enterprise Auto Supply Co. Every foot of space in the building is occupied.

Another of the real busy spots in that section of the city is the business-like and solid structure erected comparatively recently by the Rotan Realty Co. at the southeast corner of Franklin and Eighth streets. This building, which runs southward on Eighth street with the corner fronting on both Eighth and Franklin streets, is a veritable bee-hive of industry, and is occupied by many different firms. It is a great nucleus for business, and a man can get almost anything wanted in this one building.

Across on the west side of Franklin street one encounters the big buildings of the Big Four Ice Co., and many different lines are housed there. The Big Four Ice Co. has been giving residents "icy treatment" for a long time, but the people keep going back in ever increasing numbers.

Mr. D. P. Wallace of the Progressive Laundry is one of the well-satisfied business men of that section. Not only has this laundry on Franklin, west of Eighth, prospered and grown, but recently a brand new building was erected on Ninth street, adjoining the laundry on Franklin, for an up-to-date and modern cleaning and dyeing establishment, to be run in conjunction with the other business, supplementing it nicely. This business is having a wonderful run, that is the laundry, and also the cleaning and dyeing plant.

The Weathered Livery Co., which is located on Franklin, between Eighth and Ninth, north side, has found that it is in a center of much activity, and is of itself a very active and growing business.

A business which is inseparably connected with the development of this section of Waco, and which has really contributed much thereto, is the M.-B. Ice Kream Co., located on South Eighth, just below the corner of Franklin street. A pushing business from the beginning, it has come to be one of the foremost of the kind in Central Texas, and its products take rank with the very best, commanding a wide sale.

The Brazos Electric Co., located in the Wiebusch building, on Eighth between Franklin and Austin streets, is a hustling candidate for public favor, and this business has grown very fast. It is founded and conducted on business principles, making it a sure winner in the contest for business.

The Flood Plumbing Co., located on South Eighth, between Franklin and Austin streets, likewise is a business which has steadily grown to large proportions, and the patronage is increasing in a manner which attests the fact that satisfaction is being given customers.

Pat F. Hopkins, whose name is a synonym for good and satisfying work, also is located on South Eighth street, near this point, and this big concern manufactures auto bodies and wagons and does general repair work. A big force of men are kept busy even under present conditions, as the Hopkins house always has something to do. All work and materials are the best here, and this accounts for the manner in which the people turn instinctively to Pat F. Hopkins for anything of this character.

Although every section of Waco has grown despite the war and other drawbacks of the past three years, yet there are some sections which have progressed faster than others, and in a few sections the changes in the past three years have been really noteworthy.

Such a section is that which centers around Eighth and Franklin streets, and for a block in each direction up and down that thoroughfare there has been a marvelous change in the time mentioned, a change which has been wrought so steadily that many have not realized the full effect on lines of business located in that part of Waco. Up to three years ago the lines of business, most of them, were small, rather inconsequential and struggling; today that section has developed into a business area which is teeming with activity, virile with commercial strength and with a promise of yet greater things to come.

A visit was yesterday paid to that section of the city which has grown so rapidly, and the Morning News man stopped first at the Pipkin & Turner Drug Store, at Eighth and Franklin streets, in the beautiful new (or nearly new) Hill's Business College building, on the northeast corner. This beautiful drug store does not have to take a back seat for anything in Waco with its beautiful tile floor, handsome furnishings and fittings, and with its throngs of people passing in and out continuously. Not only is the cooling fountain drinks a strong attraction, but the drug store in its entirety is a great drawing card for the public. Speaking of the great changes which have taken place and which are pending in that section of the city, Mr. Wm. P. Pipkin said: "In my judgment, no part of Waco has grown and held its own as this section of the city in the past few years. It has grown and gotten better right along through war conditions, and this ought to be an indication of what it is going to do when things get normal. It has come right to the front, and the people can get their wants satisfied by high-class institutions here in any line except dry goods; the service is high class. Then, too, it is safe, as the congestion of Austin street is not noticed here, though we have a good crowd, plenty of life and movement."

Just east of the Hill's Business College building is the Clay Francis Garage, and Mr. Francis' business is another one which is prospering and expanding.

Diagonally across the street from the drug store first mentioned is the new grocery and meat line of J. C. Crippen & Son. This is without doubt one of the prettiest and best appointed places of business of the kind in the city, and the proprietors are simply delighted with this additional location. Speaking yesterday of the location at the southwest corner of Eighth and Franklin streets, Mr. Crippen said: "Yes, we are more than pleased with this place for our business. We knew it was all right, but really did not know that we would start off a business of such magnitude in such a short time. Of course we try to give the people good service, but our location must have its part of the credit for our quick success here. And the location ought to grow better all the time. Our customers are finding out about this second store of ours, and we are having a great business. We do not merely think that this section of Waco has a future, but it has a present, and we are enjoying the benefits of it."

In order to test the feeling still further from the point of Eighth and Franklin, The News man moved on up to Ninth and Franklin streets, in the new two-story building of ornate design erected by W. G. Lacy, the corner store at the northeast corner being occupied by Turner Bros.' high class grocery store. Here the same feeling of optimism prevailed, and Turner Bros. were busy handing out orders and waiting on customers who were coming in. Voicing their sentiments regarding the business, Mr. Turner said: "Yes, we are settled and down to business, and I can tell you we are doing business, too. It is not only that the people know us and know that we run the business to please the public and at attractive prices, but we have certainly made no mistake in our location. Why, it is really astonishing the way conditions have changed in this part of Waco in the past few years; one must be on the ground to realize it. Franklin street is coming into its own right along, and Waco is also growing in spite of war times. Look out for a big forward movement when the war is over. Other property owners up this way are ready to build, and tenants are going to be easy to get a little later. Just keep your eye on this part of the city, for it is certainly coming, and our business is just as satisfactory as it could well be."

Located upstairs in this same W. G. Lacy building is the hustling Shook Rubber Co., wholesale, and the location is a fine one for Mr. Shook and associates.

The other two stores downstairs are occupied by the busy and prosperous Waco Storage Battery Co. and the Enterprise Auto Supply Co. Every foot of space in the building is occupied.

Another of the real busy spots in that section of the city is the business-like and solid structure erected comparatively recently by the Rotan Realty Co. at the southeast corner of Franklin and Eighth streets. This building, which runs southward on Eighth street with the corner fronting on both Eighth and Franklin streets, is a veritable bee-hive of industry, and is occupied by many different firms. It is a great nucleus for business, and a man can get almost anything wanted in this one building.

Across on the west side of Franklin street one encounters the big buildings of the Big Four Ice Co., and many different lines are housed there. The Big Four Ice Co. has been giving residents "icy treatment" for a long time, but the people keep going back in ever increasing numbers.

Mr. D. P. Wallace of the Progressive Laundry is one of the well-satisfied business men of that section. Not only has this laundry on Franklin, west of Eighth, prospered and grown, but recently a brand new building was erected on Ninth street, adjoining the laundry on Franklin, for an up-to-date and modern cleaning and dyeing establishment, to be run in conjunction with the other business, supplementing it nicely. This business is having a wonderful run, that is the laundry, and also the cleaning and dyeing plant.

The Weathered Livery Co., which is located on Franklin, between Eighth and Ninth, north side, has found that it is in a center of much activity, and is of itself a very active and growing business.

A business which is inseparably connected with the development of this section of Waco, and which has really contributed much thereto, is the M.-B. Ice Kream Co., located on South Eighth, just below the corner of Franklin street. A pushing business from the beginning, it has come to be one of the foremost of the kind in Central Texas, and its products take rank with the very best, commanding a wide sale.

The Brazos Electric Co., located in the Wiebusch building, on Eighth between Franklin and Austin streets, is a hustling candidate for public favor, and this business has grown very fast. It is founded and conducted on business principles, making it a sure winner in the contest for business.

The Flood Plumbing Co., located on South Eighth, between Franklin and Austin streets, likewise is a business which has steadily grown to large proportions, and the patronage is increasing in a manner which attests the fact that satisfaction is being given customers.

Pat F. Hopkins, whose name is a synonym for good and satisfying work, also is located on South Eighth street, near this point, and this big concern manufactures auto bodies and wagons and does general repair work. A big force of men are kept busy even under present conditions, as the Hopkins house always has something to do. All work and materials are the best here, and this accounts for the manner in which the people turn instinctively to Pat F. Hopkins for anything of this character.

DALLAS----3

SKIPPERS POUND BALL IN THE PINCHES FOR UPHILL VICTORY.

JAMES TAPS ONE OVER FENCE

Causey Is Nicked for Ten Hits, but Steadies at Critical Times—Bittle Gets Three Out of Five.

Dallas, July 1.—It was the ability of the Sailor lads to clout the ball in the pinches that piled up the three run advantage which kept the league leaders in their high position Saturday. Causey, however, did fairly well and steadied at critical periods.

Waco started the scoring in the third, when James lifted a long one out of the park. Conley tightened and during the remainder of the inning he was not in danger. Dallas retaliated in the last half of the third. Brownlow singled, Snedecor smote out a two-bagger, Causey kindly passed Conley and Josefson and Ens singled in succession, netting three runs. It looked like Dallas was going to annex a few more with Josefson and Ens on base and only one out, but McCandless fanned and Crouch popped out.

The fifth proved lucky to Waco. Bittle crossed the plate on his single and a hit by Coyle and an error by Ens. Errors on the part of Dallas proved costly, for in the sixth Wohlleben went to first on Stupp's error and scored on a sacrifice fly by Causey and a hot single by Bttle.

Three singles in succession by Kuhn, Wohlleben and Conley following a pass which had been issued to Grubb, combined with an error by Smith, gave Waco the runs which captured the game. Pitcher Lewis, who has won fame in Dallas by the suspicion that he might be one of the million dollar pitchers Gardner has been threatening to sign, replaced Conley, who was showing the effect of the strain that he has been put under for the last few weeks. Lewis allowed one hit and Gardner promised to let him pitch in one of Sunday's games.

Tanner couldn't see a decision by Umpire McCafferty in the way that the umpire saw it, and said so. Grubb took his place.

A double header will be staged Sunday. Robertson will twirl for Dallas in the second game. Hardy hasn't announced his pitchers. The score:

RED SOX PITCHERS EXPECTED TO WIN PENNANT AGAIN FOR OLD BOSTON TOWN

Ruth (left) and Shore.

The Red Sox twirlers who are expected to win another pennant for Boston this year are the salvation of the team. The staff is good for some years to come, with such men as Shore, Ruth and Leonard just approaching their best, to say nothing of Foster, and a youngster like Mays just coming on.

Hemingway Breaks Leg at Houston

Houston, July 1.—Houston paid dearly for a ninth-inning win, 2 to 1, over Galveston here today. In the last inning, Hemingway made a brilliant running catch back against the fence, stepped into a drain ditch and broke his leg. He has been batting .300 and fielding spectacularly. The score:

Patriotism Day

—that's a good name for the 4th of July; a day when all good citizens should re-affirm their allegiance to our country.

In the meantime, if you are preparing to make the day a holiday and if your preparations include any of the things men wear, you'll want the co-operation we can give you in getting the right things.

You may want a Wood Bros. Palm Beach or Cool Cloth Suit, in a plain or pinch back model—they're $8.50 and $10.00.

—Maybe you'd like a Blue Serge for more dressy wear—$12.50, through easy price stages to $25.00.

Our kind of soft shirts, neckwear, underwear, hosiery and hats will be of great interest to you.

JAMES TAPS ONE OVER FENCE

Causey Is Nicked for Ten Hits, but Steadies at Critical Times—Bittle Gets Three Out of Five.

Dallas, July 1.—It was the ability of the Sailor lads to clout the ball in the pinches that piled up the three run advantage which kept the league leaders in their high position Saturday. Causey, however, did fairly well and steadied at critical periods.

Waco started the scoring in the third, when James lifted a long one out of the park. Conley tightened and during the remainder of the inning he was not in danger. Dallas retaliated in the last half of the third. Brownlow singled, Snedecor smote out a two-bagger, Causey kindly passed Conley and Josefson and Ens singled in succession, netting three runs. It looked like Dallas was going to annex a few more with Josefson and Ens on base and only one out, but McCandless fanned and Crouch popped out.

The fifth proved lucky to Waco. Bittle crossed the plate on his single and a hit by Coyle and an error by Ens. Errors on the part of Dallas proved costly, for in the sixth Wohlleben went to first on Stupp's error and scored on a sacrifice fly by Causey and a hot single by Bttile.

Three singles in succession by Kuhn, Wohlleben and Conley following a pass which had been issued to Grubb, combined with an error by Smith, gave Waco the runs which captured the game. Pitcher Lewis, who has won fame in Dallas by the suspicion that he might be one of the million dollar pitchers Gardner has been threatening to sign, replaced Conley, who was showing the effect of the strain that he has been put under for the last few weeks. Lewis allowed one hit and Gardner promised to let him pitch in one of Sunday's games.

Tanner couldn't see a decision by Umpire McCafferty in the way that the umpire saw it, and said so. Grubb took his place.

A double header will be staged Sunday. Robertson will twirl for Dallas in the second game. Hardy hasn't announced his pitchers. The score:

The Cubs dropped to fourth place and the Giants took the lead with .256. Jake Daubert continues to set the pace for the individuals with .345, but Bill Hinchman gained on him and went into second place. Carey of Pittsburg leads the base stealers with 24; Flack, Chicago, in sacrifice hits with 20; Williams in home runs with 8 and in total bases with 114, and Burns, New York, in runs scored with 46. CHIEF MEYERS, THOUGHT HAS-BEEN, NOW BIG HIT WITH BROOKLYN FANS

Chief Meyers.

Chief Meyers, who was thought to be "through" by John McGraw and turned over to Brooklyn this spring, has been steadily coming back and his recent hitting and fielding have made a great hit with Brooklyn fans. Just now he is the greatest favorite around the lot, except of course Uncle Wilbert Robinson, and he looks good for a great season.

Many Changes Occur In Pirate Line-Up

Galveston, July 1.—The Pirates finished a very satisfactory home stay here yesterday and today played a game with Houston. They will be back at home again tomorrow to play the Buffs a double-header and a large crowd is expected. The Houston fans will return the "call" made by the Galveston rooters two Sundays ago and promise to bring 2000 people with them. They also will bring two bands and will stage a street parade before the game. The Galveston Rooters' club will entertain them while they are in the city.

The locals are making numerous changes these days. Pitcher Bill Powell has been secured from Little Rock but apparently will be turned back. Pitcher Dashner, recently secured from Topeka, has been given his five days' notice and will be sent back to Topeka. Bill Elwert has been sold to Shreveport, but it is reported that he refused to report. Eugene Moore, who jumped the club, has been reinstated and probably will be in one of the games tomorrow.

President Dolson has lines out for at least one more pitcher and an infielder and an outfielder. The work of Hille and Breaux has not been satisfactory of late and they are likely to be replaced by other men if deals pending are put through.

Most of the games lost by the Pirates recently have been of the heart-breaking kind, where a little hit would have won for them. Gudger is the only one of the pitchers who is really going good at present and even he broke his great record Thursday when he was forced to give way to a relief pitcher under an onslaught by the Navigators. Gudger and Barfoot have been called upon to do the major part of the hurling and they have begun to fail under the strain. As soon as another dependable twirler is secured they will be allowed to rest. Then the Pirates will start climbing.

San Antonio Fans Have About Given Up Pennant Hopes

San Antonio, July 1.—The Bronchos, despite the many mishaps to its pitching staff, still are pegging away to rehabilitate themselves in the good graces of local fandom. Cap George O. Leidy, was released by President Benson last Wednesday afternoon and Jack Love was signed to captain the team in the absence of Dolly Stark, who is ill. Just who will manage the team is a question both in the minds of the fans and the local president. To date he hasn't announced just what his plans are.

However, in the opening game against Fort Worth the Nags fought the Panthers tooth and nail for thirteen frames before they finally succumbed to the wily pitching of Rankin Johnson. Ollie Jost, pitching for the locals, and Johnson both had one bad frame, but the home boys' loose inning caused five runs to go over the pan, while Johnson's cost four.

At the close of the contest the ex-Fed leaguer was twirling shutout ball, while Jost was weakening and it was a foregone conclusion after the tenth frame that the Atzmen would go over the tape on the long end. They fight their last battle today, when the Beaumont Oilers will be the card for five games, beginning Sunday, with a double-header Fourth of July. Aitchison, a twirler, was secured from Beaumont, and may pitch one of the games against his old teammates. Just how he will fare will be watched with interest by the home fans.

Harry Stewart was suffering from a strained tendon in his pitching wing early in the week, but probably will be seen against the Beaux in at least one frolic.

The fans have about given up pennant hopes unless things turn for the better, but Owner Benson still is in the market for more players and a bit of strengthening may be instituted before many days. Mr. Benson has been ill with throat trouble and is in no humor to discuss baseball these days, especially as the team as been losing game after game by close scores. However, the fans are hoping that the Nags will take a brace under the new regime.

Panthers Have Not Suffered Much on Southern Road Trip

Fort Worth, July 1—Thanks to the successes of the opponents of the Navigators, Gassers and Buffs, the Fort Worth club has not suffered greatly in the standing of the teams in spite of the streak of losses which attended their first stretch of games on the southern invasion.

The three other strong contenders were being given fits by the clubs that are not looked upon as being strong contenders at the same time the Panthers were receiving the same kind of treatment. The only result has been to make the job of picking the winner of the 1916 Texas league race still further complicated.

The Panthers have picked up a bit in the hitting line, but the other clubs seem to have done the same. Jakey Atz' pitchers are pefrorming well, but not well enough to beat the classy mound performers that oppose them with any great regularity. Fort Worth has been playing about fifty-fifty baseball for some time.

The addition of Hollander to the Fort Worth club made a decided improvement in every way. But it brought on a complication. Jakey Atz had been playing second base right along and despite the fact that he was hitting around .150 his defensive work made him valuable. Then came Hollander with a batting average around .300. About this time Pezold decided he wanted more money and quit. Atz went to right field pending the signing of a regular outfielder. He suddenly picked up in his batting and now is hitting at a .350 clip and has raised his season's average to around .275.

Lourcey, the new catcher, has not been seen in action to any great extent here, but he made a good impression in the few games he worked on the home lot.

The Panthers are at home now and fans were glad to see them back in as good shape as they are. The trip they just finished is looked upon as the hardest the club had to make during the whole season. The next Southern trip will call for but few double-headers, the weather man having been good to the Panthers on the recent tour. All looks rosy for the Atzmen for the rest of the season, with nobody on the sick list and their present good position in the standings.

Plea for Cotton Palace Zoo Is a Plea for the Kiddies

"Hurry now, children, don't be so slow," Kathleen and Mary Sue, I declare you both act as though we had the whole of eternity ahead of us instead of only this afternoon. And there's John Francis and Henry Oswald tagging behind as slow and inquisitive-like as Mr. Lot's wife.

"Don't for mercy's sake, children, stop and look at everything you see along the street. Don't you know that this may be the last time we will ever have a chance to see the monkeys and other wild animals and ferocious birds and things at that there Cotton Palace Zoo park?"

The speaker was a tall, pale, thin woman of uncertain age, ranging anywhere from 37 to 57. She was dressed in an immaculately clean calico dress that had evidently seen many washings. She wore a hat that had been all the rage four years ago. She also wore the kind of a smile that childless wives know nothing about. She wouldn't swap the reason for that smile for the total assets of the Central Texas Exchange National bank and then some. The children were garbed in starchy and unusual clothes. They had on their holiday habiliments and as a result they were uncomfortable, excited and happy.

It was one of the rare holidays the hard working mother permitted herself to indulge in. It was to be a happy event, albeit somewhat marred by the fear that it was to be the last wonderful trip of that kind.

Several care-forgetting hours were spent in the park. The kiddies quite forgot there was any such thing in the world as the arrival of an hour when feet must be scrubbed. The terrors of hair-combing and back-of-the-neck washing even were forgotten. Their childish imaginations were permitted to run wild during those blessed hours. They stalked imaginary tigers, lions, wolves and wild cats, and separated many a noble red man and treacherous Mexican from their scalps.

The tired mother was enabled to forget all about the hot, stuffy kitchen and the husband who sometimes came home in a sullen mood after working twelve hours for a boss who had never discovered the meaning of the word "appreciation." She also forgot for the time being the necessity for patching little boys' pants and the headachy efforts required in making a dress intended for a little girl 9 years old long enough to fit and satisfy a 12-year-old one. The awful scrimping required to make food enough for about three people stretch out to fill the tummies of six members of the family without any of them going to bed hungry was also forgotten for the moment. It was a great day.

Finally they started homeward. Addressing no one in particular, the mother made the following remarks concerning th proposal to sell the animals at the Cotton Palace zoo:

"To save my soul I can't understand why them kind-looking city commissioners and our big, fine, handsome mayor, Mr. John Dollins, wants to take these pretty and funny animals away from our children and us mothers. I never get tired looking at them. The good Lord Himself knows as how little pleasure we gets out of life anyway. If we had money to go to picture shows and ice cream and watermelon parlors, and things like that, of course it would be altogether different, and I wouldn't complain at all. But we haven't.

"Seems to me they might be able to save the little money it costs to feed the animals by giving one less band concert or by getting along with a man or two less in the street department.

"I sure do hate to see them little pets go. I declare if they don't seem to be almost a part of my little fambly. I know the children will cry their eyes out if the animals should be taken away.

"If I wasn't so scared of big officials, I sure would go and see our big mayor and Mr. Ben Richards and the other commissioners and tell them how bad the people in our section of town will feel if the zoo is taken away from us."

Lemberg Fourth City of Austria in Importance

Washington, July 1.—Unless the Russians meet suddenly with a signal reverse in their drive along the Austrian east front, Lemberg seems destined to pass under the dominion of the czar for a second time since the beginning of the great war. This, the fourth city of Austria, is destined in the following war geography bulletin of the National Geographic society, issued from its Washington headquarters.

"When the fortifications of the inner city of Lemberg were dismantled in 1811 and the space which they occupied was converted into promenades for the prosperous citizens of this modern Galician capital of 200,000 inhabitants, it was doubtless assumed by many that, having suffered 'the sling and arrows of outrageous fortune' for the first five centuries of its municipal existence, fate would allot it a surcease from siege and capture.

"Lying sixty miles almost due east of Przemysl, and more than 450 miles northeast of Vienna, Lemberg is situated on the banks of the Peltew river, an affluent of the Bug. It nestles in a small valley which opens to the north, and is surrounded by hills, the most picturesque being the well-wooded Franz-Josef Berg, to the northeast. To the east, a distance of eighty-seven miles, is Tarnopol, near the Russian border, one of the first points of attack when the Muscovites recently pushed beyond the Galician frontier.

"A description of the modern city of Lemberg as it existed in August, 1914, requires many modifications today, for the scars of war are to be found in its many handsome homes, its broad, well-paved streets, its Roman Catholic cathedral, a handsome gothic structure completed in 1480; its Greek cathedral, completed in 1779; its Armenian cathedral in the Byzantine style, dating back to 1437, and its magnificent monuments to such Polish patriots as King John III Sobieski, who after having saved Lemberg from the same enemy a few years previously, in 1683 saved all Europe from Mohammedan invasion by routing an army of 300,000 Turks encamped about Vienna, his own forces numbering only 70,000.

"Called Lwow in the Polish tongue and Leopolis in Latin, Lemberg was founded by a Ruthenian prince in 1259. Nearly a hundred years later it was added to the domain of Casimir the Great, who bestowed upon the city the charter and privileges widely known during the middle ages as the Magdeburg Right.

"Following the fall of Constantinople, Lemberg enjoyed a revival of trade with the east, but it was caught in the maelstrom of rebellion and pillage which swept over the Ukraine and a part of Poland during the last half of the seventeenth century, when the Cossack hetman, Chmielnicka, was directing the infamies of the 'serfs' fury.'

"Lemberg was one of the Polish cities to fall before the arms of Charles XIII of Sweden when the ill-advised Augustus II was drawn into the Great Northern war, which devastated central Europe for the first twenty years of the eighteenth century. In 1771, upon the first partition of Poland, Lemberg became an Austrian possession, and twelve years after this event Joseph II established the University of Lemberg which, at the time of the outbreak of the present war, had more than two thousan dstudents.

"One of the most attarctive parks of Lemberg, and a favorite promenade, bears the name of the Polish patriot, Jan Kilinski, a humble little shoemaker who fought bravely in 1796, was captured and taken to St. Petersburg. After his release he returned to his shoemaker's bench and in his leisure hours wrote his recollections, a valuable record of this period of his country's history.

"Since the establishment of the Galician Diet in 1861 Lemberg has enjoyed increasing prosperity. Its manufactures include machinery and iron ware, matches, candles, liquors, chocolate, leather, bricks and tiles, while ist commerce is largely in linen, flax, hem, wool and oil.

"In 1907 two interesting finds were made in th evicinity of this city by laborers boring for oil. The bodies of an elephant and a rhinoceros were unearthed in a remarkable state of preservation, even the hides being intact, due, probabyl, to the preservative qualities of the oily soil in which they were buried."

WAVING LOVED ONES A LAST FAREWELL

In many cities throughout the land pathetic scenes mark the departure of national guardsmen for the Mexican border. All is smiles, cheers and waving of flags while the boys pass by, but once entrained the mothers, sisters and sweethearts break down when they consider the possibility that their loved ones will never return. It is said that President Wilson's reluctance to intervene in Mexico is due in large measure to the appeals that have been sent him from the women at home.

CHIEF MEYERS, THOUGHT HAS-BEEN, NOW BIG HIT WITH BROOKLYN FANS

Chief Meyers.

Chief Meyers, who was thought to be "through" by John McGraw and turned over to Brooklyn this spring, has been steadily coming back and his recent hitting and fielding have made a great hit with Brooklyn fans. Just now he is the greatest favorite around the lot, except of course Uncle Wilbert Robinson, and he looks good for a great season.

Many Changes Occur In Pirate Line-Up

Galveston, July 1.—The Pirates finished a very satisfactory home stay here yesterday and today played a game with Houston. They will be back at home again tomorrow to play the Buffs a double-header and a large crowd is expected. The Houston fans will return the "call" made by the Galveston rooters two Sundays ago and promise to bring 2000 people with them. They also will bring two bands and will stage a street parade before the game. The Galveston Rooters' club will entertain them while they are in the city.

The locals are making numerous changes these days. Pitcher Bill Powell has been secured from Little Rock but apparently will be turned back. Pitcher Dashner, recently secured from Topeka, has been given his five days' notice and will be sent back to Topeka. Bill Elwert has been sold to Shreveport, but it is reported that he refused to report. Eugene Moore, who jumped the club, has been reinstated and probably will be in one of the games tomorrow.

President Dolson has lines out for at least one more pitcher and an infielder and an outfielder. The work of Hille and Breaux has not been satisfactory of late and they are likely to be replaced by other men if deals pending are put through.

Most of the games lost by the Pirates recently have been of the heart-breaking kind, where a little hit would have won for them. Gudger is the only one of the pitchers who is really going good at present and even he broke his great record Thursday when he was forced to give way to a relief pitcher under an onslaught by the Navigators. Gudger and Barfoot have been called upon to do the major part of the hurling and they have begun to fail under the strain. As soon as another dependable twirler is secured they will be allowed to rest. Then the Pirates will start climbing.

San Antonio Fans Have About Given Up Pennant Hopes

San Antonio, July 1.—The Bronchos, despite the many mishaps to its pitching staff, still are pegging away to rehabilitate themselves in the good graces of local fandom. Cap George O. Leidy, was released by President Benson last Wednesday afternoon and Jack Love was signed to captain the team in the absence of Dolly Stark, who is ill. Just who will manage the team is a question both in the minds of the fans and the local president. To date he hasn't announced just what his plans are.

However, in the opening game against Fort Worth the Nags fought the Panthers tooth and nail for thirteen frames before they finally succumbed to the wily pitching of Rankin Johnson. Ollie Jost, pitching for the locals, and Johnson both had one bad frame, but the home boys' loose inning caused five runs to go over the pan, while Johnson's cost four.

At the close of the contest the ex-Fed leaguer was twirling shutout ball, while Jost was weakening and it was a foregone conclusion after the tenth frame that the Atzmen would go over the tape on the long end. They fight their last battle today, when the Beaumont Oilers will be the card for five games, beginning Sunday, with a double-header Fourth of July. Aitchison, a twirler, was secured from Beaumont, and may pitch one of the games against his old teammates. Just how he will fare will be watched with interest by the home fans.

Harry Stewart was suffering from a strained tendon in his pitching wing early in the week, but probably will be seen against the Beaux in at least one frolic.

The fans have about given up pennant hopes unless things turn for the better, but Owner Benson still is in the market for more players and a bit of strengthening may be instituted before many days. Mr. Benson has been ill with throat trouble and is in no humor to discuss baseball these days, especially as the team as been losing game after game by close scores. However, the fans are hoping that the Nags will take a brace under the new regime.

Panthers Have Not Suffered Much on Southern Road Trip

Fort Worth, July 1—Thanks to the successes of the opponents of the Navigators, Gassers and Buffs, the Fort Worth club has not suffered greatly in the standing of the teams in spite of the streak of losses which attended their first stretch of games on the southern invasion.

The three other strong contenders were being given fits by the clubs that are not looked upon as being strong contenders at the same time the Panthers were receiving the same kind of treatment. The only result has been to make the job of picking the winner of the 1916 Texas league race still further complicated.

The Panthers have picked up a bit in the hitting line, but the other clubs seem to have done the same. Jakey Atz' pitchers are pefroming well, but not well enough to beat the classy mound performers that oppose them with any great regularity. Fort Worth has been playing about fifty-fifty baseball for some time.

The addition of Hollander to the Fort Worth club made a decided improvement in every way. But it brought on a complication. Jakey Atz had been playing second base right along and despite the fact that he was hitting around .150 his defensive work made him valuable. Then came Hollander with a batting average around .300. About this time Pezold decided he wanted more money and quit. Atz went to right field pending the signing of a regular outfielder. He suddenly picked up in his batting and now is hitting at a .350 clip and has raised his season's average to around .275.

Lourcey, the new catcher, has not been seen in action to any great extent here, but he made a good impression in the few games he worked on the home lot.

The Panthers are at home now and fans were glad to see them back in as good shape as they are. The trip they just finished is looked upon as the hardest the club had to make during the whole season. The next Southern trip will call for but few double-headers, the weather man having been good to the Panthers on the recent tour. All looks rosy for the Atzmen for the rest of the season, with nobody on the sick list and their present good position in the standings.

Plea for Cotton Palace Zoo Is a Plea for the Kiddies

"Hurry now, children, don't be so slow. Kathleen and Mary Sue, I declare you both act as though we had the whole of eternity ahead of us instead of only this afternoon. And there's John Francis and Henry Oswald tagging behind as slow and inquisitive-like as Mr. Lot's wife.

"Don't for mercy's sake, children, stop and look at everything you see along the street. Don't you know that this may be the last time we will ever have a chance to see the monkeys and other wild animals and ferocious birds and things at that there Cotton Palace Zoo park?"

The speaker was a tall, pale, thin woman of uncertain age, ranging anywhere from 37 to 57. She was dressed in an immaculately clean calico dress that had evidently seen many washings. She wore a hat that had been all the rage four years ago. She also wore the kind of a smile that childless wives know nothing about. She wouldn't swap the reason for that smile for the total assets of the Central Texas Exchange National bank and then some. The children were garbed in starchy and unusual clothes. They had on their holiday habiliments and as a result they were uncomfortable, excited and happy.

It was one of the rare holidays the hard working mother permitted herself to indulge in. It was to be a happy event, albeit somewhat marred by the fear that it was to be the last wonderful trip of that kind.

Several care-forgetting hours were spent in the park. The kiddies quite forgot there was any such thing in the world as the arrival of an hour when feet must be scrubbed. The terrors of hair-combing and back-of-the-neck washing even were forgotten. Their childish imaginations were permitted to run wild during those blessed hours. They stalked imaginary tigers, lions, wolves and wild cats, and separated many a noble red man and treacherous Mexican from their scalps.

The tired mother was enabled to forget all about the hot, stuffy kitchen and the husband who sometimes came home in a sullen mood after working twelve hours for a boss who had never discovered the meaning of the word "appreciation." She also forgot for the time being the necessity for patching little boys' pants and the headachy efforts required in making a dress intended for a little girl 9 years old long enough to fit and satisfy a 12-year-old one. The awful scrimping required to make food enough for about three people stretch out to fill the tummies of six members of the family without any of them going to bed hungry was also forgotten for the moment. It was a great day.

Finally they started homeward. Addressing no one in particular, the mother made the following remarks concerning th proposal to sell the animals at the Cotton Palace zoo:

"To save my soul I can't understand why them kind-looking city commissioners and our big, fine, handsome mayor, Mr. John Dollins, wants to take these pretty and funny animals away from our children and us mothers. I never get tired looking at them. The good Lord Himself knows as how little pleasure we gets out of life anyway. If we had money to go to picture shows and ice cream and watermelon parlors, and things like that, of course it would be altogether different, and I wouldn't complain at all. But we haven't.

"Seems to me they might be able to save the little money it costs to feed the animals by giving one less band concert or by getting along with a man or two less in the street department.

"I sure do hate to see them little pets go. I declare if they don't seem to be almost a part of my little fambly. I know the children will cry their eyes out if the animals should be taken away.

"If I wasn't so scared of big officials, I sure would go and see our big mayor and Mr. Ben Richards and the other commissioners and tell them how bad the people in our section of town will feel if the zoo is taken away from us."

Lemberg Fourth City of Austria in Importance

Washington, July 1.—Unless the Russians meet suddenly with a signal reverse in their drive along the Austrian east front, Lemberg seems destined to pass under the dominion of the czar for a second time since the beginning of the great war. This, the fourth city of Austria, is destined in the following war geography bulletin of the National Geographic society, issued from its Washington headquarters.

"When the fortifications of the inner city of Lemberg were dismantled in 1811 and the space which they occupied was converted into promenades for the prosperous citizens of this modern Galician capital of 200,000 inhabitants, it was doubtless assumed by many that, having suffered 'the sling and arrows of outrageous fortune' for the first five centuries of its municipal existence, fate would allot it a surcease from siege and capture.

"Lying sixty miles almost due east of Przemysl, and more than 450 miles northeast of Vienna, Lemberg is situated on the banks of the Peltew river, an affluent of the Bug. It nestles in a small valley which opens to the north, and is surrounded by hills, the most picturesque being the well-wooded Franz-Josef Berg, to the northeast. To the east, a distance of eighty-seven miles, is Tarnopol, near the Russian border, one of the first points of attack when the Muscovites recently pushed beyond the Galician frontier.

"A description of the modern city of Lemberg as it existed in August, 1914, requires many modifications today, for the scars of war are to be found in its many handsome homes, its broad, well-paved streets, its Roman Catholic cathedral, a handsome gothic structure completed in 1480; its Greek cathedral, completed in 1779; its Armenian cathedral in the Byzantine style, dating back to 1437, and its magnificent monuments to such Polish patriots as King John III Sobieski, who after having saved Lemberg from the same enemy a few years previously, in 1683 saved all Europe from Mohammedan invasion by routing an army of 300,000 Turks encamped about Vienna, his own forces numbering only 70,000.

"Called Lwow in the Polish tongue and Leopolis in Latin, Lemberg was founded by a Ruthenian prince in 1259. Nearly a hundred years later it was added to the domain of Casimir the Great, who bestowed upon the city the charter and privileges widely known during the middle ages as the Magdeburg Right.

"Following the fall of Constantinople, Lemberg enjoyed a revival of trade with the east, but it was caught in the maelstrom of rebellion and pillage which swept over the Ukraine and a part of Poland during the last half of the seventeenth century, when the Cossack hetman, Chmielnicka, was directing the infamies of the 'serfs' fury.'

"Lemberg was one of the Polish cities to fall before the arms of Charles XIII of Sweden when the ill-advised Augustus II was drawn into the Great Northern war, which devastated central Europe for the first twenty years of the eighteenth century. In 1771, upon the first partition of Poland, Lemberg became an Austrian possession, and twelve years after this event Joseph II established the University of Lemberg which, at the time of the outbreak of the present war, had more than two thousan dstudents.

"One of the most attarctive parks of Lemberg, and a favorite promenade, bears the name of the Polish patriot, Jan Kilinski, a humble little shoemaker who fought bravely in 1796, was captured and taken to St. Petersburg. After his release he returned to his shoemaker's bench and in his leisure hours wrote his recollections, a valuable record of this period of his country's history.

"Since the establishment of the Galician Diet in 1861 Lemberg has enjoyed increasing prosperity. Its manufactures include machinery and iron ware, matches, candles, liquors, chocolate, leather, bricks and tiles, while ist commerce is largely in linen, flax, hem, wool and oil.

"In 1907 two interesting finds were made in th evicinity of this city by laborers boring for oil. The bodies of an elephant and a rhinoceros were unearthed in a remarkable state of preservation, even the hides being intact, due, probabyl, to the preservative qualities of the oily soil in which they were buried."

WAVING LOVED ONES A LAST FAREWELL

In many cities throughout the land pathetic scenes mark the departure of national guardsmen for the Mexican border. All is smiles, cheers and waving of flags while the boys pass by, but once entrained the mothers, sisters and sweethearts break down when they consider the possibility that their loved ones will never return. It is said that President Wilson's reluctance to intervene in Mexico is due in large measure to the appeals that have been sent him from the women at home.

COTTON ACREAGE UNUSUALLY LARGE

Washington, July 1.—High prices of cotton and cotton seed has encouraged farmers in the cotton belt to increase their acreage this year substantially over last year's area resulting in a total of 35,994,000 acres, accordingto the official estimate of the department of agriculture announced today.

The condition of the crop, 81.8 per cent of a normal on June 25, indicates that the total production of lint this year will be about 14,266,000 equivalent 500-pound bales, the bureau of crop estimates calculates. That yield would place this year's crop the third largest ever grown, being smaller than those of 1911 and 1914.

In a statement reviewing the acreage and the condition of the crop, the department of agriculture's bureau of crop estimate continues:

"There has been a general increase in the acreage planted to cotton over the entire belt. There is a decided increase in the northern portion of the belt west of the Mississippi river and in the states of Louisiana and Mississippi. These states, long boll weevil strongholds, are gradually recovering their acreage. Several hundred thousand acres in South Texas will produce no cotton this year on account of extreme drouth which has lasted more than six months. The heavy producing Mississippi river bottom lands has a heavy increase, partly accounted for by new lands going into cultivation. Alabama and Florida are suffering from 'weevil panic' and there is not much increase in the acreage in the infested territory. In Georgia and the Carolinas there is a substantial increase. Cotton is the main money crop of the south. The staple and seed are bringing high prices and this has encouraged farmers all over the cotton belt to increase their acreage substantially over last year.

"Condition: The chief complaints this month are boll weevils and wet weather. Weevils are numerous over much of the cotton area of Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama and in a smaller area in Arkansas and Georgia. In northwest Texas and western Oklahoma severe hail and wind storms did local damage. Stands are better than usual, but in the Carolinas and Georgia there is much irregularity in the size of the plants because of dry weather in May. Taking the belt as a whole, the crop will average at least two weeks late."

The acreage and the condition on June 25, by states, follow:

State—	Acreage.	Condition.
Virginia	44,000	.90
North Carolina	1,469,000	.76

The Ethics of Big Game Hunting.

(George Agnew Chamberlain in the Century Magazine.)

I believe that to every intelligent big game shot occasionally come moments when he has disturbing qualms as to the ethics of killing. How can a man love game and still kill it? That is a question that plunges down to elementals, and, like all the fundamental queries that are eternally argued and never settled, it is nicely balanced. In one scale lie all the refinements of civilization; the qualities of mercy, justice, fair play, regard for the value of all life, and last, but not least in power, the fastidiousness that revolts from blood, suffering and anything ugly.

The other scale is burdened with things sensuous in the least objectionable meaning of that distorted term. The desire to conquer is ten thousand years older than the training to let live. Ninety-nine boys out of a hundred feel a never-to-be-forgotten surge of the blood at knocking over their first sparrow with a pebble from a catapult and yet almost every one of the ninety-nine would sense nothing but horror at killing the same sparrow were it caged. Why? Because in one case he feels like a sportsman and a victor and in the other he knows that he is a murderer.

Whether you believe in killing or not, here is the evolution of the sportsman in a single sentence, the child with a slingshot who to the tracking instainct that get him near enough to the sparrow to shoot at it adds the skill to hit it; the boy who scorns to pot a sitting rabbit; the youth who gets his duck and partridge on the wing; the man who matches his silence, skill and endurance against caribou, moose and bear, mountain goat, ibex and all the dozen ox-sized antelopes of Africa until he passes into the smallest graduate school in the world, and faces the great triumvirate of sport, lion, buffalo and elephant. Here at least we are on grounds above all quibbling, for it's fair play and no favor at last, and the stakes are a life for a life.

MARKET REPORT

COTTON

New York.

New York, July 1.—The government's crop report was followed by a sensational break in the cotton market here today. October contracts for instance sold off from 13.28 to 12.85 and closed at 12.91, while the general list closed barely steady at a net loss of 26 to 29 points.

Trading was quiet before the report was published and prices were generally steady. Owing to the holiday, there were no official cables from Liverpool, but houses with Liverpool connections were moderate buyers, while there also was some demand from New Orleans sources and after opening at an advance of 2 to 3 points the market sold about 6 to 8 points above last night's closing figures during the early trading. This advance carried July contracts up to 13.08 and December to 13.45 and there probably was some scattered covering by local shorts who had carried their cotton holdings over the decline of Friday.

The government report making the condition 81.1 and indicating an increase of 12.1 per cent in acreage proved very much more favorable than had been generally expected, however, and proved the signal for heavy general selling. Recent private reports had indicated a condition of slightly under 80 per cent, under thre average, while the official acreage estimate was above the average of private figures, and the marget broke 40 points or more before the end of the morning, with July selling off to 12.70 and December 13.02, or the lowest prices reached since December sold at 13.61 on June 22. Closing prices were a few points up from the lowest on covering.

New Orleans.

New Orleans, July 1.—The unexpected bearish showing of the government's reports on acreage and condition caused a sensational slump in the cotton market here today, the most active months breaking 35 to 36 points, or practically $2 per bale.

The increase in acreage of 12.1 per cent exceeded average expectations of around 8 to 9 per cent and the condition of the crop on June 25 of 81.1 exceeded average expectations ranging from 76 to 79.

Except for a few minutes immediately following the reading of the reports the market was only moderately active. When the statistics were issued the market stood 3 to 8 points over yesterday's close. October immediately lost 15 points and soon the entire list began to fall away. Within half an hour of the receipt of the reports the market had lost 35 to 36 points. The close was within a point of the lowest, or at a loss of 26 to 33 points compared to yesterday's close.

WHEAT

Chicago, July 1.—Disinclination of dealers to carry open risks over the holidays resulted today in higher prices for wheat. The close, although unsettled, showed a net advance of ⅝@1⅞c, with July at $1.03¾ and September at $1.05⅝@1.05½. Corn finished ⅛@¼c higher; oats up ⅛@⅛ to ⅝c, and provisions at a rise of 2½@12½c, barring July pork, which was down 17½c.

Wheat took an upward swing almost from the outset. Notable absence of selling pressure was a feature. In corn an active inquiry from the seaboard was to some extent counterbalanced by the weather conditions.

Prices in oats tended to harden because of fear that high temperatures would injure the growing crop.

Provisions ascended to the highest prices yet this season. An upturn in the value of hogs was the chief incentive.

Futures ranged as follows today:

Wheat—	Open.	High.	Low.	Close

COLOR

SHE WATCHED FOR THREE FEET OF SUNSET.

(Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Every evening she watched for three feet of sunset.

The deep gash between two tenements on which her window faced was turned toward the west at an angle that gave her an outlook about as wide as fifty-nine-cent shantung silk. Every evening it was different. Often it was as hard and gray as the taffeta she sold to old ladies. Sometimes it was a quivering blue that made her heart hurt, a happy sort of pain more satisfying than the waves of joy that came when sweeps of rose and gold and violet made her dizzy with beauty. She hoped, when she became more experienced, to sell on the third floor instead of in a bargain basement, but she sometimes doubted if handling evening cloaks and party dresses of silk and silver and velvet would ever mean as much to her as the wonderful tints that were spread free for everybody to see—way over there behind New Jersey.

There was a time when her craving for color had been denied even a strip of sky. That was when they lived in Grand street, on the first floor facing an inner court. Everything in that neighborhood was dull—gray, brown or black that had withered into green. There were spots of color in the head 'kerchiefs and shawls of the old women and in spring the push carts peddled geraniums, pansies and sickly strings of ivy. She had never owned anything bright except some red hair ribbons and an imitation coral necklace. The geranium she bought with painfully saved pennies had died. At school, Delena had to wear the faded, discarded clothes of older sisters who were wage earners, and when she grew old enough to go to work the management of the department store ruled that she must always wear black.

Because she listened to the advice of the store's welfare woman, Delena never made the mistake of her older sisters who vented their suppressed love of color in Sunday clothes of cheap satin. In a little talk on taste, the woman had remarked that no real lady ever indulged in anything that was loud or shoddy, and the little Italian from the department store basement heeded because she liked the welfare woman for not using what she had come to call a settlement house voice." The woman scolded her charges, advised them, instructed them, but no one had ever heard her patronize even a little cash girl.

"Mrs. Henry's going to have a new office," Delena overheard one morning. "The old man is going to let her pick out anything she wants to furnish it. No limit. I bet it will be elegant. Mrs. Henry acts like a real swell and knows a lot of them. I'll bet that the way she fixes up that new office will be somethin' just grand."

Delena made an excuse to visit the new office. She wanted to feast her eyes on the sort of grandeur that the welfare woman would approve. On the threshold she paused, while her look of beaming anticipation was changed to one of disappointment and grief.

"Why, they said the old man was going to do things just handsome for you, Mis' Henry. Ain't he the ole skinflint! Why, you oughta have the best office in the place."

Mrs. Henry looked puzled.

"Don't you think it is?" she asked.

Delena shook her head at the gray walls and floors and dull blue "wash" hangings. Even the wooden and wicker furniture was gray. There was very little of it. Except for the amber shades on the lights and at the windows and a few jonquils stuck upright in a flat dish that cost no more than thirty-nine cents, there was not a bit of brightness in the place.

"It's so bare—these Jap rugs, when you might have had a real plushlike carpet. And a lot of things to make it look brighter and real elegant."

Mrs. Henry might have laughed and changed the subject, but something in the girl's brooding face made her ask:

"Don't you think the room looks cool?"

"Yes," admitted the young critic.

"Having plain furniture and neutral tints makes it look larger and—fresher and restful. I spent a whole day looking for the right shade of blue to go with the French gray," explained the welfare woman tactfully.

Delena nodded, unconvinced.

"But—everything's dull!" she cried. "Outside it has gotta be. But here—you could do so different. Oh, I get so tired of seeing things look so all alike, streets and clothes and walls. Honest, if it wasn't for the billboards and the sunsets I just couldn't stand this city sometimes."

Mrs. Henry was not a welfare woman by an eight-hour clock. She was an ideal teacher, a genius with a love of people which forced her to share wit h them every good thing she learned.

"You'd like the new art stuffs," she exclaimed brightly. "I'll notify your floor manager that I want you for an hour and we'll go up to the interior decorating floor. The man in that department can tell us so much about brilliant colorings and how to use them. I'm sure you'll love to see some of the new shades—and to learn where they belong."

Delena, blushing at being introduced by her full name, Magdalena, listened and looked—and enjoyed. She was too ignorant to digest or apply any of the wisdom of the expert colorist, but her thought was stimulated and she went back to her own counter silent and dreaming. Next day, Mrs. Henry sent her a ticket to an exhibition of futurist and cubist and modernist art. She giggled at most of it, but lingered over the costume drawing of Baskt.

"I'd like to make up things like that because they are so crazy," she told the welfare woman. "But, of course, no one would wear them. They ain't designed for people who have to always wear ready-mades."

If this story were published in a fifteen cent magazine, Magdelena would be sent to a night school where her color sense would have been trained until she became a great interior decorator or painter or costumer. But a writer for newspapers has the advantage of being privileged to tell a few unromantic truths. Mrs. Henry did direct the girl to a night art school and even obtained for her a raise in salary which covered the necessary fees. But, three months later, Delena met and admired the handsome young superintendent of an adjoining apartment house. In three months more they were married. In a little less than two years after she had become interested in Delena, Mrs. Henry was informed that the thirty-fifth daughter of her department store family was to be Deborah Henry Doldini. Accompanied by her own daughter, she went to call.

Mrs. Delena Doldini was very "well to do," according to neighborhood standards. Mrs. Henry wondered if the new home would be planned according to the theory of the "dull" gray office or the demand for something elegant that was part of the girl's untrained taste. A hot, smotheringly red wall paper greeted her in the entry. A deep rose wall paper covered with a splashy satiny figure adorned the "parlor." A rose rug that verged on purplish red covered the floor and a "set" with brocaded upholstery was tangled in between many tables of gilt and mahogany.

The center of attraction in the little flat was, of course, the thirty-fifth Deborah Henry, who reclined in a pink-hung bassinet, her plump legs and wrists tied with gay satin bows. Mrs. Doldini, very proud and very plump and rosy, wore a yellow silk neglilee with purplestockings and slippers, and a pale blue boudoir cap. She was bolstered up on a divan covered with cushions of velvet and silk in all shades of green, orange, red, purple and blue. Many of them were heavily embroidered with magenta roses and gold dragons. A hand-painted jardiniere held a burst of pink chrysanthemums. Several hand-painted plaques and embroidered table covers and gay lamp shades added to the effect of decorative extravagance.

"You see, we are very comfortable here," observed the young mother with pride.

Mrs. Henry and her daughter had scarcely closed the street door behind them when the young woman laughed, gasped and made a gesture of horror.

"Did you ever see anything so awful?" she cried.

"It isn't awful. It is beautiful," insisted the welfare woman very firmly. "Magdalena's love for color was once starved—and now she is happy because she can buy plenty of it. I didn't succeed in training it to the point of good taste—but, thank heaven, I didn't succeed in destroying it, either."

"You mean?"

"Well, Deborah Henry Doldini may get a better education than her mother. I shouldn't be surprised if she turned out to be a great painter. The Lord is a good manager, and He'll probably use that color sense somewhere. He never would create a passion as strong and as beautiful as that and let our fool civilization waste it all."

LOWER CALIFORNIA IS NEUTRAL.

Lower California, according to the proclamation of Gov. Esteban Cantu, will remain neutral in whatever quarrel may be impending between the United States and Mexico.

It is a remarkable proclamation; what should we think if Governor Johnson of California issued a similar proclamation of neutrality? But Esteban Cantu is a remarkable man, one of whom we may hear much more in the future. In all this period of strife he has kept his state peaceful and prosperous. He has kept his revenues good in spite of the prevailing tendencies toward chaos, and has succeeded in keeping real money in circulation, to the discomfiture of American importers who are forced to pay the heavy local export duties—$100 on a mule, for example—in American gold instead of Carrancista faith.

He has been trying in a practical way to aid in restoring general peace. We may recall his recent invitation to the Yaqui Indians late in the Villa army to come into Lower California and settle on the public lands. It is worth noting that on the California border there is no hostility between Americans and Mexicans.

At Calexico you can't arouse any interest in the question of intervention. The local view is that Mexican affairs could not be better managed than under Esteban Cantu.

BURNS OLD GLORY IN "MELTING POT"

Bouck White.

COTTON ACREAGE UNUSUALLY LARGE

Washington, July 1.—High prices of cotton and cotton seed has encouraged farmers in the cotton belt to increase their acreage this year substantially over last year's area resulting in a total of 35,994,000 acres, accordingto the official estimate of the department of agriculture announced today.

The condition of the crop, 81.8 per cent of a normal on June 25, indicates that the total production of lint this year will be about 14,266,000 equivalent 500-pound bales, the bureau of crop estimates calculates. That yield would place this year's crop the third largest ever grown, being smaller than those of 1911 and 1914.

In a statement reviewing the acreage and the condition of the crop, the department of agriculture's bureau of crop estimate continues:

"There has been a general increase in the acreage planted to cotton over the entire belt. There is a decided increase in the northern portion of the belt west of the Mississippi river and in the states of Louisiana and Mississippi. These states, long boll weevil strongholds, are gradually recovering their acreage. Several hundred thousand acres in South Texas will produce no cotton this year on account of extreme drouth which has lasted more than six months. The heavy producing Mississippi river bottom lands has a heavy increase, partly accounted for by new lands going into cultivation. Alabama and Florida are suffering from 'weevil panic' and there is not much increase in the acreage in the infested territory. In Georgia and the Carolinas there is a substantial increase. Cotton is the main money crop of the south. The staple and seed are bringing high prices and this has encouraged farmers all over the cotton belt to increase their acreage substantially over last year.

"Condition: The chief complaints this month are boll weevils and wet weather. Weevils are numerous over much of the cotton area of Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama and in a smaller area in Arkansas and Georgia. In northwest Texas and western Oklahoma severe hail and wind storms did local damage. Stands are better than usual, but in the Carolinas and Georgia there is much irregularity in the size of the plants because of dry weather in May. Taking the belt as a whole, the crop will average at least two weeks late."

The acreage and the condition on June 25, by states, follow:

State—	Acreage.	Condition.
Virginia	44,000	.90
North Carolina	1,469,000	.76
South Carolina	2,938,600	.74

The Ethics of Big Game Hunting.

(George Agnew Chamberlain in the Century Magazine.)

I believe that to every intelligent big game shot occasionally come moments when he has disturbing qualms as to the ethics of killing. How can a man love game and still kill it? That is a question that plunges down to elementals, and, like all the fundamental queries that are eternally argued and never settled, it is nicely balanced. In one scale lie all the refinements of civilization; the qualities of mercy, justice, fair play, regard for the value of all life, and last, but not least in power, the fastidiousness that revolts from blood, suffering and anything ugly.

The other scale is burdened with things sensuous in the least objectionable meaning of that distorted term. The desire to conquer is ten thousand years older than the training to let live. Ninety-nine boys out of a hundred feel a never-to-be-forgotten surge of the blood at knocking over their first sparrow with a pebble from a catapult and yet almost every one of the ninety-nine would sense nothing but horror at killing the same sparrow were it caged. Why? Because in one case he feels like a sportsman and a victor and in the other he knows that he is a murderer.

Whether you believe in killing or not, here is the evolution of the sportsman in a single sentence, the child with a slingshot who to the tracking instainct that get him near enough to the sparrow to shoot at it adds the skill to hit it; the boy who scorns to pot a sitting rabbit; the youth who gets his duck and partridge on the wing; the man who matches his silence, skill and endurance against caribou, moose and bear, mountain goat, ibex and all the dozen ox-sized antelopes of Africa until he passes into the smallest graduate school in the world, and faces the great triumvirate of sport, lion, buffalo and elephant. Here at least we are on grounds above all quibbling, for it's fair play and no favor at last, and the stakes are a life for a life.

COTTON

New York.

New York, July 1.—The government's crop report was followed by a sensational break in the cotton market here today. October contracts for instance sold off from 13.28 to 12.85 and closed at 12.91, while the general list closed barely steady at a net loss of 26 to 29 points.

Trading was quiet before the report was published and prices were generally steady. Owing to the holiday, there were no official cables from Liverpool, but houses with Liverpool connections were moderate buyers, while there also was some demand from New Orleans sources and after opening at an advance of 2 to 3 points the market sold about 6 to 8 points above last night's closing figures during the early trading. This advance carried July contracts up to 13.08 and December to 13.45 and there probably was some scattered covering by local shorts who had carried their cotton holdings over the decline of Friday.

The government report making the condition 81.1 and indicating an increase of 12.1 per cent in acreage proved very much more favorable than had been generally expected, however, and proved the signal for heavy general selling. Recent private reports had indicated a condition of slightly under 80 per cent, under thre average, while the official acreage estimate was above the average of private figures, and the marqet broke 40 points or more before the end of the morning, with July selling off to 12.70 and December 13.02, or the lowest prices reached since December sold at 13.61 on June 22. Closing prices were a few points up from the lowest on covering.

New Orleans.

New Orleans, July 1.—The unexpected bearish showing of the government's reports on acreage and condition caused a sensational slump in the cotton market here today, the most active months breaking 35 to 36 points, or practically $2 per bale.

The increase in acreage of 12.1 per cent exceeded average expectations of around 8 to 9 per cent and the condition of the crop on June 25 of 81.1 exceeded average expectations ranging from 76 to 79.

Except for a few minutes immediately following the reading of the reports the market was only moderately active. When the statistics were issued the market stood 3 to 8 points over yesterday's close. October immediately lost 15 points and soon the entire list began to fall away. Within half an hour of the receipt of the reports the market had lost 35 to 36 points. The close was within a point of the lowest, or at a loss of 26 to 33 points compared to yesterday's close.

WHEAT

Chicago, July 1.—Disinclination of dealers to carry open risks over the holidays resulted today in higher prices for wheat. The close, although unsettled, showed a net advance of ⅝@1⅞c, with July at $1.03¼ and September at $1.05⅝@1.05½. Corn finished ⅛@¼c higher; oats up ⅛@½ to ⅝c, and provisions at a rise of 2½@12½c, barring July pork, which was down 17½c.

Wheat took an upward swing almost from the outset. Notable absence of selling pressure was a feature. In corn an active inquiry from the seaboard was to some extent counterbalanced by the weather conditions.

Prices in oats tended to harden because of fear that high temperatures would injure the growing crop.

Provisions ascended to the highest prices yet this season. An upturn in the value of hogs was the chief incentive.

Futures ranged as follows today:

COLOR

SHE WATCHED FOR THREE FEET OF SUNSET.

(Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Every evening she watched for three feet of sunset.

The deep gash between two tenements on which her window faced was turned toward the west at an angle that gave her an outlook about as wide as fifty-nine-cent shantung silk. Every evening it was different. Often it was as hard and gray as the taffeta she sold to old ladies. Sometimes it was a quivering blue that made her heart hurt, a happy sort of pain more satisfying than the waves of joy that came when sweeps of rose and gold and violet made her dizzy with beauty. She hoped, when she became more experienced, to sell on the third floor instead of in a bargain basement, but she sometimes doubted if handling evening cloaks and party dresses of silk and silver and velvet would ever mean as much to her as the wonderful tints that were spread free for everybody to see—way over there behind New Jersey.

There was a time when her craving for color had been denied even a strip of sky. That was when they lived in Grand street, on the first floor facing an inner court. Everything in that neighborhood was dull—gray, brown or black that had withered into green. There were spots of color in the head 'kerchiefs and shawls of the old women and in spring the push carts peddled geraniums, pansies and sickly strings of ivy. She had never owned anything bright except some red hair ribbons and an imitation coral necklace. The geranium she bought with painfully saved pennies had died. At school, Delena had to wear the faded, discarded clothes of older sisters who were wage earners, and when she grew old enough to go to work the management of the department store ruled that she must always wear black.

Because she listened to the advice of the store's welfare woman, Delena never made the mistake of her older sisters who vented their suppressed love of color in Sunday clothes of cheap satin. In a little talk on taste, the woman had remarked that no real lady ever indulged in anything that was loud or shoddy, and the little Italian from the department store basement heeded because she liked the welfare woman for not using what she had come to call a settlement house voice." The woman scolded her charges, advised them, instructed them, but no one had ever heard her patronize even a little cash girl.

"Mrs. Henry's going to have a new office," Delena overheard one morning. "The old man is going to let her pick out anything she wants to furnish it. No limit. I bet it will be elegant. Mrs. Henry acts like a real swell and knows a lot of them. I'll bet that the way she fixes up that new office will be somethin' just grand."

Delena made an excuse to visit the new office. She wanted to feast her eyes on the sort of grandeur that the welfare woman would approve. On the threshold she paused, while her look of beaming anticipation was changed to one of disappointment and grief.

"Why, they said the old man was going to do things just handsome for you, Mis' Henry. Ain't he the ole skinflint! Why, you oughta have the best office in the place."

Mrs. Henry looked puzled.

"Don't you think it is?" she asked.

Delena shook her head at the gray walls and floors and dull blue "wash" hangings. Even the wooden and wicker furniture was gray. There was very little of it. Except for the amber shades on the lights and at the windows and a few jonquils stuck upright in a flat dish that cost no more than thirty-nine cents, there was not a bit of brightness in the place.

"It's so bare—these Jap rugs, when you might have had a real plushlike carpet. And a lot of things to make it look brighter and real elegant."

Mrs. Henry might have laughed and changed the subject, but something in the girl's brooding face made her ask:

"Don't you think the room looks cool?"

"Yes," admitted the young critic.

"Having plain furniture and neutral tints makes it look larger and—fresher and restful. I spent a whole day looking for the right shade of blue to go with the French gray," explained the welfare woman tactfully.

Delena nodded, unconvinced.

"But—everything's dull!" she cried. "Outside it has gotta be. But here—you could do so different. Oh, I get so tired of seeing things look so all alike, streets and clothes and walls. Honest, if it wasn't for the billboards and the sunsets I just couldn't stand this city sometimes."

Mrs. Henry was not a welfare woman by an eight-hour clock. She was an ideal teacher, a genius with a love of people which forced her to share wit h them every good thing she learned.

"You'd like the new art stuffs," she exclaimed brightly. "I'll notify your floor manager that I want you for an hour and we'll go up to the interior decorating floor. The man in that department can tell us so much about brilliant colorings and how to use them. I'm sure you'll love to see some of the new shades—and to learn where they belong."

Delena, blushing at being introduced by her full name, Magdalena, listened and looked—and enjoyed. She was too ignorant to digest or apply any of the wisdom of the expert colorist, but her thought was stimulated and she went back to her own counter silent and dreaming. Next day, Mrs. Henry sent her a ticket to an exhibition of futurist and cubist and modernist art. She giggled at most of it, but lingered over the costume drawing of Baskt.

"I'd like to make up things like that because they are so crazy," she told the welfare woman. "But, of course, no one would wear them. They ain't designed for people who have to always wear ready-mades."

If this story were published in a fifteen cent magazine, Magdelena would be sent to a night school where her color sense would have been trained until she became a great interior decorator or painter or costumer. But a writer for newspapers has the advantage of being privileged to tell a few unromantic truths. Mrs. Henry did direct the girl to a night art school and even obtained for her a raise in salary which covered the necessary fees. But, three months later, Delena met and admired the handsome young superintendent of an adjoining apartment house. In three months more they were married. In a little less than two years after she had become interested in Delena, Mrs. Henry was informed that the thirty-fifth daughter of her department store family was to be Deborah Henry Doldini. Accompanied by her own daughter, she went to call.

Mrs. Delena Doldini was very "well to do," according to neighborhood standards. Mrs. Henry wondered if the new home would be planned according to the theory of the "dull" gray office or the demand for something elegant that was part of the girl's untrained taste. A hot, smotheringly red wall paper greeted her in the entry. A deep rose wall paper covered with a splashy satiny figure adorned the "parlor." A rose rug that verged on purplish red covered the floor and a "set" with brocaded upholstery was tangled in between many tables of gilt and mahogany.

The center of attraction in the little flat was, of course, the thirty-fifth Deborah Henry, who reclined in a pink-hung bassinet, her plump legs and wrists tied with gay satin bows. Mrs. Doldini, very proud and very plump and rosy, wore a yellow silk negilee with purplestockings and slippers, and a pale blue boudoir cap. She was bolstered up on a divan covered with cushions of velvet and silk in all shades of green, orange, red, purple and blue. Many of them were heavily embroidered with magenta roses and gold dragons. A hand-painted jardiniere held a burst of pink chrysanthemums. Several hand-painted plaques and embroidered table covers and gay lamp shades added to the effect of decorative extravagance.

"You see, we are very comfortable here," observed the young mother with pride.

Mrs. Henry and her daughter had scarcely closed the street door behind them when the young woman laughed, gasped and made a gesture of horror.

"Did you ever see anything so awful?" she cried.

"It isn't awful. It is beautiful," insisted the welfare woman very firmly. "Magdalena's love for color was once starved—and now she is happy because she can buy plenty of it. I didn't succeed in training it to the point of good taste—but, thank heaven, I didn't succeed in destroying it, either."

"You mean?"

"Well, Deborah Henry Doldini may get a better education than her mother. I shouldn't be surprised if she turned out to be a great painter. The Lord is a good manager, and He'll probably use that color sense somewhere. He never would create a passion as strong and as beautiful as that and let our fool civilization waste it all."

LOWER CALIFORNIA IS NEUTRAL.

Lower California, according to the proclamation of Gov. Esteban Cantu, will remain neutral in whatever quarrel may be impending between the United States and Mexico.

It is a remarkable proclamation; what should we think if Governor Johnson of California issued a similar proclamation of neutrality? But Esteban Cantu is a remarkable man, one of whom we may hear much more in the future. In all this period of strife he has kept his state peaceful and prosperous. He has kept his revenues good in spite of the prevailing tendencies toward chaos, and has succeeded in keeping real money in circulation, to the discomfiture of American importers who are forced to pay the heavy local export duties—$100 on a mule, for example—in American gold instead of Carrancista faith.

He has been trying in a practical way to aid in restoring general peace. We may recall his recent invitation to the Yaqui Indians late in the Villa army to come into Lower California and settle on the public lands. It is worth noting that on the California border there is no hostility between Americans and Mexicans.

At Calexico you can't arouse any interest in the question of intervention. The local view is that Mexican affairs could not be better managed than under Esteban Cantu.

RECORD PRICE OF $2.50 AN EAR FOR HILL COUNTY CORN.

(Hillsboro Mirror.)

Corn is usually sold in Texas by the bushel and one dollar a bushel is considered a splendid price for it, so that when a well known Hill county man offers $2.50 an ear for Hill county corn, not only the corn growers but all classes "sit up and take notice" and begin to wonder what kind of corn raised in Hill county could bring such a fabulous price, and how many ears does the man want, and where can corn be bought at a dollar a bushel and sold at $2.50 an ear.

The Mirror rises to explain that the offer is a genuine one, made by a gentleman well known to have that much money—and then some, and more than willing to part with it for the purposes and considerations hereafter to be expressed.

D. B. White of Bynum, at the board meeting of the Hill County Fair association, held Tuesday afternoon, offered a special premium of $25 for the best ten ears of corn grown in Hill county to be exhibited at the Hill county fair the first week in October, with the understanding that he is to keep all the corn exhibited for his special prize. This offer is open to Hill county, and the exhibitor can place his ten ears with his own farm exhibit or with his community exhibit, and after these classes have been passed on, take his ten ears and place them in the special exhibit of Mr. White.

Of course, the man who gets this premium will receive $2.50 an ear for his ten ears of corn.

(Hillsboro Mirror.)

Corn is usually sold in Texas by the bushel and one dollar a bushel is considered a splendid price for it, so that when a well known Hill county man offers $2.50 an ear for Hill county corn, not only the corn growers but all classes "sit up and take notice" and begin to wonder what kind of corn raised in Hill county could bring such a fabulous price, and how many ears does the man want, and where can corn be bought at a dollar a bushel and sold at $2.50 an ear.

The Mirror rises to explain that the offer is a genuine one, made by a gentleman well known to have that much money—and then some, and more than willing to part with it for the purposes and considerations hereafter to be expressed.

D. B. White of Bynum, at the board meeting of the Hill County Fair association, held Tuesday afternoon, offered a special premium of $25 for the best ten ears of corn grown in Hill county to be exhibited at the Hill county fair the first week in October, with the understanding that he is to keep all the corn exhibited for his special prize. This offer is open to Hill county, and the exhibitor can place his ten ears with his own farm exhibit or with his community exhibit, and after these classes have been passed on, take his ten ears and place them in the special exhibit of Mr. White.

Of course, the man who gets this premium will receive $2.50 an ear for his ten ears of corn.

HOPE.

When the twilight of the dawning,
Blooms in sunlight to the day,
When the roses in their sweetness,
Make the sunshine cross the way.

When sweet love thy soul enchanting,
Pauses near, thy heart to reach,
And the effort all ennobling,
Makes thy soul unbend, beseech.

How say there's naught that's worth the living,
All's dark, nor cold, nor drear,
Take heart ye who pilgrimating,
Seemest wan and void of cheer.

Plod on further in thy seeking,
Cross the bridge of sighs and tears,
Let life's fingers tune the heart-strings,
And lend sweetness to thy years.

Life holds naught but sweetest glories,
And the memories of each day,
Will be ever peaceful stories,
If you love and teach and pray.

Tidwell of Baylor university spoke the words that united in marriage his only daughter, Sallye, to Couch Roberts of El Paso. The bride was lovely in a handsome gown of white embroidered net and carried a bouquet of bride's roses and valley lilies. Her traveling suit was a dark blue taffeta coat suit with accessories to match. The groom wore a suit of conventional black.

The bride is one of Waco's most beautiful girls and by her charm of manner and happy disposition has endeared herself to a large number of friends, not only in Waco and Baylor university, where she was educated, but over Texas and other states. These friends will wish for her much joy and happiness in her new life.

The groom comes from one of the best families of El Paso and is himself a prominent young ranchman and a man of sterling worth, who is in every way worthy of the girl of his choice.

Among the presents received by the couple were a handsome chest of silver from the bride's family and from her uncle a resident lot in El Paso, upon which to build their future home.

Immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Roberts left over the Katy for a trip to California. On their way they expect to include Kansas City, Colorado Springs, Denver, Salt Lake City and other places of interest in the west. After the first of August they will be at home in El Paso.

MERRY CAFETERIA SUPPER IS ENJOYED

On Friday evening Mrs. J. W. Bondurant and Miss Jane Moore were dual hostess for dual honorees. In this Mr. and Mrs. Fred Evans of Kaufman, who are spending some weeks in Waco, were complimented. Also Mr. and Mrs. Charles Guthrie, recently from San Antonio, to whom Wacoans are extending such a cordial welcome. It had been whispered that the evening marked another mile stone in the life of Mrs. Guthrie, and to the surprise of honoree and guests it was found to be also the first wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Evans.

The supper, consisting of several courses of tempting summer dishes, was served on the spacious side lawn, where a profusion of sunflowers was used artistically. Brass jardinieres of these yellow flowers with their big dark eyes, were placed on stands at attractive spots all over the lawn, while here and there brown baskets held dozens of these yellow fringed blooms.

The hour of invitation was 8 o'clock and so keen was the anticipation that promptly each guest arrived with a ribbon tied package, when opened later by Dr. Carl Lovelace, were found to be birthday remembrances with good wishes in verse, for Mrs. Guthrie. This elicited much merriment for now she is the envied possessor of "trinkets and rings and other bright things." Congratulations and good wishes for continued happiness were extended Mr. and Mrs. Evans.

This was one of the very jolliest of the summer parties. The Moore home has long been noted for its hospitality, and with Mr. and Mrs. Evans and Mr. and Mrs. Guthrie for honorees, this proved no exception. Enjoying the evening were Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Holt, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Mistrot, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Link, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Guthrie, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Burrows.

FOLK WE TOUCH IN PASSING

WITHOUT A DIFFERENCE.

BY JULIA CHANDLER.

(Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

THE SECOND WOMAN'S BARGAIN WITH THE MAN OF WEALTH DID NOT INCLUDE THE CEREMONIAL OF MARRIAGE.

In the eyes of The World the First Woman's sale of herself was a brilliant bargain entirely justified by the marriage ceremony.

The Second Woman gave herself in exchange for the luxuries of life without the scrap of paper, and Society shunned her like a polluted thing.

But God said: "There is no difference between you."

Two women lived their lives according to their relative understanding of the purpose of being.

The First Woman came to maturity with the single idea of making a good match, by which she meant marrying a man who was able and willing to keep her in luxury and idleness all the days that she should live.

Once upon a time the question of love did enter into the matter, for where is there a girl in the first blush of womanhood who is not susceptible to romance? But, unfortunately for her ambitions, the throb of her heart was for one who could give promise of only moderate comforts along life's way; one by whose side she would have to work and sacrifice.

For a time The First Woman told herself that Love was the one thing in life worth the having; the one thing necessary to self-fulfillment, but as time went on and she still waited for The One Man to achieve a sufficient financial success to ask her hand in marriage The Other Man came into her life; and the glint of his gold blinded her to life's true values.

Now The Other Man was years older than The First Woman. The souls of them were as far removed as the South Pole is removed from that of the North. No spiritual tie bound them in any way, shape, or form. She was young, beautiful and accustomed to the soft things of life. He was well past fifty, a roue with a life behind him that had been ignobly spent.

But The First Woman wanted the Other Man's money and all that it stood for, while he wanted the fair young body of her, so the deal was made in the holy name of matrimony with never a twinge of conscience.

The World looked on at the marriage of the First Woman to The Other Man with a broad grin of approval. Some there were who ventured a comment that there was too much disparity of interests and ideals, and one or two ventured an opinion that it was something of a pity for one so young and fair to link her life to that of a man whose face was turned toward the sunset, but so many there were ready to remind the disapprovers of all the wonderful things The Other Man could give The First Woman that soon the marriage was accepted as a mighty good match on the part of the girl, and society fawned for her favor.

So The First Woman went her way of life, keeping her end of the bargain, content with the reward she received, and glorying in the sycophants she acquired.

The Second Woman's idea of the purpose of life tallied well with that of her sister. The things to be desired were in her mind such as are connected with creature comforts; the call of the flesh rather than that of the spirit. She, too, had her dream of love but, as in the first case, offered nothing of the silken lure. So The Second Woman, even as The First, ignored the voice of her better self and sold her charms to the highest bidder.

But with a difference.

The Second Woman's bargain with The Man of Wealth did not include the ceremonial of matrimony.

Somehow she was afraid of the binding quality of the bond he offered her. She argued to herself that the time might come when she might feel that the price she paid was too great to be endured.

So she sold herself for a pot of gold and scoffed at the conventions of society.

Whereupon The World gasped its astonishment; treated The Second Woman's name as though it were a thing to be spoken only in guarded whispers, and walked by on the other side of the street with skirts drawn as away from some polluted thing.

At the end of the little span of earthly life the two women stood side by side in their spiritual bodies, looking with horror-haunted eyes upon the temporal shell for the adornment of which each had sacrificed every worth while thing there is in life—love, companionship, and the home that is builded in faith and beauty upon these things.

The First Woman held out her hands in appeal to the Creator, bearing in them the certificate of her marriage to The Other Man which had made her conduct right and admirable in the eyes of The World while The Second Woman stood close by empty handed.

But the God who made them shook His head in unutterable sadness.

"You are both alike," He said.

"The only difference lies in your methods. The degree of your prostitution is the same."

HOPE.

When the twilight of the dawning,
Blooms in sunlight to the day,
When the roses in their sweetness,
Make the sunshine cross the way.

When sweet love thy soul enchanting,
Pauses near, thy heart to reach,
And the effort all ennobling,
Makes thy soul unbend, beseech.

How say there's naught that's worth the living,
All's dark, nor cold, nor drear,
Take heart ye who pilgrimating,
Seemest wan and void of cheer.

Plod on further in thy seeking,
Cross the bridge of sighs and tears,
Let life's fingers tune the heart-strings,
And lend sweetness to thy years.

Life holds naught but sweetest glories,
And the memories of each day,
Will be ever peaceful stories,
If you love and teach and pray.

This marked the closing of the model school for the summer normal students, and by request the "Mother Goose" program given some months ago, was repeated. The program consisted of eight songs from the Mother Goose Rhymes, and a pageant in which fifteen children representing Mother Goose characters participated. Miss Taylor was at the piano and also read the history of the Mother Goose play. Miss Alice Dawson as "Mistress Mary Quite Contrary," was a leading character. The names of these splendidly drilled children were Margaret and Elizabeth Harris, Margaret Melton, William Duff, John Espy Watt, Myrtle Bess Evans, Clarence Howard, Thomas Harris, Doris and Morris Sanderford, Mamie Jordan, Edna Rundell, Genevieve Greer Chenney.

ROBERTS-TIDWELL WEDDING SOLEMNIZED

One of the prettiest home weddings of the season was solemnized on Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock when in the presence of only the family circle and near relatives, Dr. J. B. Tidwell of Baylor university spoke the words that united in marriage his only daughter, Sallye, to Couch Roberts of El Paso. The bride was lovely in a handsome gown of white embroidered net and carried a bouquet of bride's roses and valley lilies. Her traveling suit was a dark blue taffeta coat suit with accessories to match. The groom wore a suit of conventional black.

The bride is one of Waco's most beautiful girls and by her charm of manner and happy disposition has endeared herself to a large number of friends, not only in Waco and Baylor university, where she was educated, but over Texas and other states. These friends will wish for her much joy and happiness in her new life.

The groom comes from one of the best families of El Paso and is himself a prominent young ranchman and a man of sterling worth, who is in every way worthy of the girl of his choice.

Among the presents received by the couple were a handsome chest of silver from the bride's family and from her uncle a resident lot in El Paso, upon which to build their future home.

Immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Roberts left over the Katy for a trip to California. On their way they expect to include Kansas City, Colorado Springs, Denver, Salt Lake City and other places of interest in the west. After the first of August they will be at home in El Paso.

MERRY CAFETERIA SUPPER IS ENJOYED

On Friday evening Mrs. J. W. Bondurant and Miss Jane Moore were dual hostess for dual honorees. In this Mr. and Mrs. Fred Evans of Kaufman, who are spending some weeks in Waco, were complimented. Also Mr. and Mrs. Charles Guthrie, recently from San Antonio, to whom Wacoans are extending such a cordial welcome. It had been whispered that the evening marked another mile stone in the life of Mrs. Guthrie, and to the surprise of honoree and guests it was found to be also the first wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Evans.

The supper, consisting of several courses of tempting summer dishes, was served on the spacious side lawn, where a profusion of sunflowers was used artistically. Brass jardinieres of these yellow flowers with their big dark eyes, were placed on stands at attractive spots all over the lawn, while here and there brown baskets held dozens of these yellow fringed blooms.

The hour of invitation was 8 o'clock and so keen was the anticipation that promptly each guest arrived with a ribbon tied package, when opened later by Dr. Carl Lovelace, were found to be birthday remembrances with good wishes in verse, for Mrs. Guthrie. This elicited much merriment for now she is the envied possessor of "trinkets and rings and other bright things." Congratulations and good wishes for continued happiness were extended Mr. and Mrs. Evans.

This was one of the very jolliest of the summer parties. The Moore home has long been noted for its hospitality, and with Mr. and Mrs. Evans and Mr. and Mrs. Guthrie for honorees, this proved no exception. Enjoying the evening were Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Holt, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Mistrot, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Link, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Guthrie, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Burrows.

FOLK WE TOUCH IN PASSING

WITHOUT A DIFFERENCE.

BY JULIA CHANDLER.

(Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

THE SECOND WOMAN'S BARGAIN WITH THE MAN OF WEALTH DID NOT INCLUDE THE CEREMONIAL OF MARRIAGE.

In the eyes of The World the First Woman's sale of herself was a brilliant bargain entirely justified by the marriage ceremony.

The Second Woman gave herself in exchange for the luxuries of life without the scrap of paper, and Society shunned her like a polluted thing.

But God said: "There is no difference between you."

Two women lived their lives according to their relative understanding of the purpose of being.

The First Woman came to maturity with the single idea of making a good match, by which she meant marrying a man who was able and willing to keep her in luxury and idleness all the days that she should live.

Once upon a time the question of love did enter into the matter, for where is there a girl in the first blush of womanhood who is not susceptible to romance? But, unfortunately for her ambitions, the throb of her heart was for one who could give promise of only moderate comforts along life's way; one by whose side she would have to work and sacrifice.

For a time The First Woman told herself that Love was the one thing in life worth the having; the one thing necessary to self-fulfillment, but as time went on and she still waited for The One Man to achieve a sufficient financial success to ask her hand in marriage The Other Man came into her life; and the glint of his gold blinded her to life's true values.

Now The Other Man was years older than The First Woman. The souls of them were as far removed as the South Pole is removed from that of the North. No spiritual tie bound them in any way, shape, or form. She was young, beautiful and accustomed to the soft things of life. He was well past fifty, a roue with a life behind him that had been ignobly spent.

But The First Woman wanted the Other Man's money and all that it stood for, while he wanted the fair young body of her, so the deal was made in the holy name of matrimony with never a twinge of conscience.

The World looked on at the marriage of the First Woman to The Other Man with a broad grin of approval. Some there were who ventured a comment that there was too much disparity of interests and ideals, and one or two ventured an opinion that it was something of a pity for one so young and fair to link her life to that of a man whose face was turned toward the sunset, but so many there were ready to remind the disapprovers of all the wonderful things The Other Man could give The First Woman that soon the marriage was accepted as a mighty good match on the part of the girl, and society fawned for her favor.

So The First Woman went her way of life, keeping her end of the bargain, content with the reward she received, and glorying in the sycophants she acquired.

The Second Woman's idea of the purpose of life tallied well with that of her sister. The things to be desired were in her mind such as are connected with creature comforts; the call of the flesh rather than that of the spirit. She, too, had her dream of love but, as in the first case, offered nothing of the silken lure. So The Second Woman, even as The First, ignored the voice of her better self and sold her charms to the highest bidder.

But with a difference.

The Second Woman's bargain with The Man of Wealth did not include the ceremonial of matrimony.

Somehow she was afraid of the binding quality of the bond he offered her. She argued to herself that the time might come when she might feel that the price she paid was too great to be endured.

So she sold herself for a pot of gold and scoffed at the conventions of society.

Whereupon The World gasped its astonishment; treated The Second Woman's name as though it were a thing to be spoken only in guarded whispers, and walked by on the other side of the street with skirts drawn as away from some polluted thing.

At the end of the little span of earthly life the two women stood side by side in their spiritual bodies, looking with horror-haunted eyes upon the temporal shell for the adornment of which each had sacrificed every worth while thing there is in life—love, companionship, and the home that is builded in faith and beauty upon these things.

The First Woman held out her hands in appeal to the Creator, bearing in them the certificate of her marriage to The Other Man which had made her conduct right and admirable in the eyes of The World while The Second Woman stood close by, empty handed.

But the God who made them shook His head in unutterable sadness.

"You are both alike," He said.

"The only difference lies in your methods. The degree of your prostitution is the same."

Not Marching to Verdun; Yale Grads in Preparedness Parade

"Preparedness" corps marching up College avenue, New Haven.

The Yale commencement exercises were featured by a "preparedness" corps in the persons of the class of '06, Sheffield. This being the tenth anniversary of their graduation, the class decided upon something extraordinary to add to the exercises. The adoption of a costume similar to that worn by the French troops was the result. The uniform is of steel gray cloth and the helmet is an exact representation of the helmet worn by the French except that it is made of papier mache.

CITY NURSE PROBLEM STILL TO BE SOLVED

MRS. AUBREY OF FEDERATED MISSION IN MESSAGE TELLS OF WORK TO BE DONE.

Sanitation Is Cheaper Than Funerals, She Insists—Would Have City Wake Up.

Making a strong plea for the municipal nurse, the milk permit system and other civic reform projects, Mrs. Llewellyn Aubrey, president of the City Federation of Missionary Societies, delivered an interesting address at the regular monthly meeting of the federation last Friday. Mrs. Aubrey's address amounts to an official program of work for the organization. The address follows:

The title "President's Message" sounds rather too august for me to use, but it is an earnest message pertaining to the varying present activities and future strivings of this great association. I felt its potential responsibilities when I reluctantly assumed the presidency and more and more I feel the need of wielding any influence that we may have with great care.

When I took this office there seemed a year's work before us in "doing our bit" for the Y. W. C. A. and getting another traveler's aid. Only three months have gone past and we have the Y. W. C. A. in working order, if not yet in the perfection that we can see before it, and I think I can be permitted to quote Miss Corbett, the general secretary of the Y. W. C. A., who said: "If it had not been for the feeling of cordial Christian fellowship, engendered by the federated missions, making the women of the city know the abilities of their sister churchwomen of other denominations, and the habit of working together for common aims the Y. W. C. A. would never have been a certainty in so short a time, and with such unanimity of purpose."

As to a traveler's aid at the Missouri, Kansas and Texas station I think without divulging a confidence I can at least tell you that we feel its possibility assured within a short time through another source than the missions.

In one of the reports of the recent Latin-American congress, I found the following, which I hope truly expresses our federation spirit and might almost be called our "creed:"

"The end of Evangelical teaching is to be found not only in the pursuit of personal salvation, but also in the constant manifestation of patriotism, the love of our fellow man, and the desire to engage in any and every kind of personal effort and concerted movement which will tend to cleanse political life of graft, industrial life of cruelty, commercial life of dishonesty and all social relations of vice and depravity. With unity of spirit and active fellowship."

CITY NURSE PROBLEM UNSOLVED.

Does it seem as if our slate was wiped clean for new problems? Alas, no! Where is our beloved Miss Edwards, the city nurse? Taking a needed rest for further usefulness, but whether with us or some more appreciative community, only time and the city fathers can tell us. The church and club women went before the community with proposition that they would pay Miss Edwards' salary for one year, with the expectation of the city taking it up from that on, with many pre-election promises. We still hope that it will materialize for the women have completed their obligation.

A rather indignant lady asked me the other day what I intended to do to get the city nurse, a pure food inspector and a malk permit system. I replied that your new social service president, a delegation from the city clubs and a delegation from the Federated Missions and myself have done all that, frankly, we know to do up to the present, but had plans for the future. It seems to be a "stalemate" like the battle of Verdun, but as in the case of the French battle, I feel our battle is not yet fought to a finish, and I am just as certain that victory will adorn our banners. Just give us a little more time.

The legal terms, "Criminal negligence," and "Unjustifiable homicide" haunt me at night. To whom will they apply this summer for babies dead from impure milk, sick women and men from contaminated meat and unclean stores and unscreened vegetable wagons? Who will bear the stigma and take the punishment? Will it be the city authorities; the ignorant or depraved purveyors, or is it we women who have not yet done all that may be we could in some way do?

HAVE NOT AN CITY.

It seems that we, as a city, cannot afford all these frills of inspectors, milk permits and pure milk, but it seems that we can afford squeegee on the brick pavements to lessen the noise of traffic. Will it deaden the sound of funerals, too? I don't know how much squeegee costs but $100 is called the average cost of a funeral. If adequate sanitary and pure food inspection should save one hundred lives this summer that means $10,000 towards the assets of the city. This isn't a woman's way of looking at the city budget, but the modern scientific way in cities run on the modern lines of a city manager. Not only babies' lives but even the cost of the city's ink is estimated. However, we are not a modern scientific city, so why discuss it?

Let me read again what Evangelical religion should mean. The desire to engage in every kind of personal effort and concerted movement which tends to cleanse industrial life of cruelty. Are we doing "our bit" as women against commercial cruelty when we do not think of our personal share in relieving the ice men of unnecessary Sunday work? Are we doing our share, now stop to think of it women, if we wait to shop until 8:30 Saturday night when our girls behind the counters are ready to drop with fatigue? Our merchants are more considerate to these same girls than we are, they are ready to close at 7 p. m. the year around. Women will sign petitions, now I am sorry to say this, but they will and then go right down and snop on Saturday afternoon, congesting the stores so that women whose husbands are paid on Saturday noon, are forced to go at night to get attention. In many great manufacturing centers in the north the men are paid on Monday instead of Saturday, when the pay envelopes go home the rent is paid, the children are fed and clothed, and the men do not have headaches to go to work with on Monday after a Sunday of debauchery.

STRESSES RED CROSS.

Again our Evangelical creed, "It should teach constant manifestations of patriotism." We deplore war, but I hope that we are not like the little Sunday school boys when asked the Golden Rule, said "Safety First;" our country must stand for right even if war comes, and that means Red Cross work. We must help pay our $1 when called upon for it, but if we haven't the dollar to give, we can give ourselves by working in rolling bandages, making night shirts and other hospital supplies when the call is seen in the papers for volunteers for work.

Several years ago New York instituted what Dallas undertook last winter. Free legal advice for the poor, foreign or ignorant. Take this one case, right here in Waco. A poor negro couple had boarded for four days, where it seems their housekeeper had not paid his rent. The landlord or his agent came and took the sewing machine and shot gun of these boarders for this unpaid rent, that they had nothing to do with, also knocking down a little child who protested. Now what could they do?

Another case, a poor Italian, with death and continued sickness in his family, borrowed $300 from a loan shark. He paid interest up to $300 and was then told he still owed $100 in interest and the original $300 principal, and if he did not pay it he would be thrown into prison. What could he do? He did not know the laws of the land as to usury. This free legal advice we must have and work for in the near future in Waco.

SHOULD PRACTICE PATRIOTISM.

Let us finish with less tragic things. Women, do we teach our children the patriotic songs of our country and do we also teach them the great battle hymns of the Christian church? We may know one verse of "Onward Christian Soldier," maybe all of "Nearer, My God, to Thee," but how many do we and our children really know, so that if we were sick in bed and wanted to say over these great hymns, we could pass the long hard night hours saying them silently to ourselves? Has it gone entirely out of fashion for the whole family on Sunday evenings to get around the piano and sing hymn after hymn?

Just one plea more for training our children, a story I saw in the New York Times. One day at St. Cloud, near Paris, a tiny boy picked a flower from a plant in one of the public gardens. His brother, a few years older, saw him and began to explain the nature of his crime, telling him that that flower belonged to the nation. With tears in his eyes the small boy went back and laid the little flower at the root of the parent plant and left it there. This is an illustration of the spirit of France and the civic spirit shown by its citizens.

May we teach our American children just such patriotism and now in closing let me quote what I heard at the Musical Federation in this city, "Let us get together, stay together, work together and grow together."

MORRELL-SHIRLEY WEDDING OBSERVED

Last Wednesday evening at 9 o'clock at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Melia Morrill, was performed the ceremony uniting in marriage her only daughter, Emma Julia, and Mr. Newton A. Shirley of Penelope, Rev. W. B. Holland of Clay Street Baptist church, officiating. The wedding was beautiful in its simplicity.

The parlors and reception hall were attractively decorated with daisies and ferns. The guests were welcomed at the door by the bride's mother, Mrs. Melia Morrill, and Mrs. W. G. Moran. Only relatives and a few intimate friends were present.

With Miss Yola Bellamy of Mart at the piano, the strains of Lohengrin's Wedding March was the signal for the entrance of the bride's attendants, Miss Nannie Dale Meers and Miss Mabel Moran. Miss Meers' dress was of white taffeta and net with a touch of shell pink. Miss Moran's dress was of embroidered net and blue messaline. The bride entered with the groom. She was attired in a beautiful gown of white taffeta and point de sprit. The bride and maids carried beautiful arm bouquets of Shasta daisies. The groom wore the conventional black.

An informal reception for the young couple was held immediately following the ceremony, during which their friends viewed the many handsome and useful gifts which attested the popularity of the young couple.

The bride presented her attendants, who were her childhood friends, with jeweled hair ornaments. Her going away gown was a suit of champagne taffeta with hat and accessories to match.

The bride is one of the most popular and charming young ladies of the South Side. The groom is a most progressive young business man of Penelope, where Mr. and Mrs. Shirley will make their future home. This wedding is the culmination of a happy romance begun while the bride was teaching in Penelope.

The out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. A. Shirley and son Clayton, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Smith and Mr. J. R. Hight of Penelope; Mr. and Mrs. L. Bellamy and daughters Flora and Yola of Mart, and Misses Bertha and Della Parrish, Miss Thelma Moran.

Mrs. W. A. Badger of Cleveland, Ohio, readily recalled as Miss Josephine McLennan, has secured funds from the alumni of National Park seminary of New York, which school she attended, sufficient to endow a room for babies in one of the largest hospitals of Cleveland.

Miss Lillian Westbrook came on yesterday from San Angelo. She will be with Miss Dixon Holloway until her mother's return.

Misses Ardith Ellis and Dorothy Kepler will honor Miss Ouida Ferguson with a dance on next Thursday evening. The function promises to be one of the most pleasing of early summer.

"Preparedness" corps marching up College avenue, New Haven.

The Yale commencement exercises were featured by a "preparedness" corps in the persons of the class of '06, Sheffield. This being the tenth anniversary of their graduation, the class decided upon something extraordinary to add to the exercises. The adoption of a costume similar to that worn by the French troops was the result. The uniform is of steel gray cloth and the helmet is an exact representation of the helmet worn by the French except that it is made of papier mache.

CITY NURSE PROBLEM STILL TO BE SOLVED

MRS. AUBREY OF FEDERATED MISSION IN MESSAGE TELLS OF WORK TO BE DONE.

Sanitation Is Cheaper Than Funerals, She Insists—Would Have City Wake Up.

Making a strong plea for the municipal nurse, the milk permit system and other civic reform projects, Mrs. Llewellyn Aubrey, president of the City Federation of Missionary Societies, delivered an interesting address at the regular monthly meeting of the federation last Friday. Mrs. Aubrey's address amounts to an official program of work for the organization. The address follows:

The title "President's Message" sounds rather too august for me to use, but it is an earnest message pertaining to the varying present activities and future strivings of this great association. I felt its potential responsibilities when I reluctantly assumed the presidency and more and more I feel the need of wielding any influence that we may have with great care.

When I took this office there seemed a year's work before us in "doing our bit" for the Y. W. C. A. and getting another traveler's aid. Only three months have gone past and we have the Y. W. C. A. in working order, if not yet in the perfection that we can see before it, and I think I can be permitted to quote Miss Corbett, the general secretary of the Y. W. C. A., who said: "If it had not been for the feeling of cordial Christian fellowship, engendered by the federated missions, making the women of the city know the abilities of their sister churchwomen of other denominations, and the habit of working together for common aims the Y. W. C. A. would never have been a certainty in so short a time, and with such unanimity of purpose."

As to a traveler's aid at the Missouri, Kansas and Texas station I think without divulging a confidence I can at least tell you that we feel its possibility assured within a short time through another source than the missions.

In one of the reports of the recent Latin-American congress, I found the following, which I hope truly expresses our federation spirit and might almost be called our "creed:"

"The end of Evangelical teaching is to be found not only in the pursuit of personal salvation, but also in the constant manifestation of patriotism, the love of our fellow man, and the desire to engage in any and every kind of personal effort and concerted movement which will tend to cleanse political life of graft, industrial life of cruelty, commercial life of dishonesty and all social relations of vice and depravity. With unity of spirit and active fellowship."

CITY NURSE PROBLEM UNSOLVED.

Does it seem as if our slate was wiped clean for new problems? Alas, no! Where is our beloved Miss Edwards, the city nurse? Taking a needed rest for further usefulness, but whether with us or some more appreciative community, only time and the city fathers can tell us. The church and club women went before the community with proposition that they would pay Miss Edwards' salary for one year, with the expectation of the city taking it up from that on, with many pre-election promises. We still hope that it will materialize for the women have completed their obligation.

A rather indignant lady asked me the other day what I intended to do to get the city nurse, a pure food inspector and a malk permit system. I replied that your new social service president, a delegation from the city clubs and a delegation from the Federated Missions and myself have done all that, frankly, we know to do up to the present, but had plans for the future. It seems to be a "stalemate" like the battle of Verdun, but as in the case of the French battle, I feel our battle is not yet fought to a finish, and I am just as certain that victory will adorn our banners. Just give us a little more time.

The legal terms, "Criminal negligence," and "Unjustifiable homicide" haunt me at night. To whom will they apply this summer for babies dead from impure milk, sick women and men from contaminated meat and unclean stores and unscreened vegetable wagons? Who will bear the stigma and take the punishment? Will it be the city authorities; the ignorant or depraved purveyors, or is it we women who have not yet done all that may be we could in some way do?

HAVE NOT AN CITY.

It seems that we, as a city, cannot afford all these frills of inspectors, milk permits and pure milk, but it seems that we can afford squeegee on the brick pavements to lessen the noise of traffic. Will it deaden the sound of funerals, too? I don't know how much squeegee costs but $100 is called the average cost of a funeral. If adequate sanitary and pure food inspection should save one hundred lives this summer that means $10,000 towards the assets of the city. This isn't a woman's way of looking at the city budget, but the modern scientific way in cities run on the modern lines of a city manager. Not only babies' lives but even the cost of the city's ink is estimated. However, we are not a modern scientific city, so why discuss it?

Let me read again what Evangelical religion should mean. The desire to engage in every kind of personal effort and concerted movement which tends to cleanse industrial life of cruelty. Are we doing "our bit" as women against commercial cruelty when we do not think of our personal share in relieving the ice men of unnecessary Sunday work? Are we doing our share, now stop to think of it women, if we wait to shop until 8:30 Saturday night when our girls behind the counters are ready to drop with fatigue? Our merchants are more considerate to these same girls than we are, they are ready to close at 7 p. m. the year around. Women will sign petitions, now I am sorry to say this, but they will and then go right down and snop on Saturday afternoon, congesting the stores so that women whose husbands are paid on Saturday noon, are forced to go at night to get attention. In many great manufacturing centers in the north the men are paid on Monday instead of Saturday, when the pay envelopes go home the rent is paid, the children are fed and clothed, and the men do not have headaches to go to work with on Monday after a Sunday of debauchery.

STRESSES RED CROSS.

Again our Evangelical creed, "It should teach constant manifestations of patriotism." We deplore war, but I hope that we are not like the little Sunday school boys when asked the Golden Rule, said "Safety First;" our country must stand for right even if war comes, and that means Red Cross work. We must help pay our $1 when called upon for it, but if we haven't the dollar to give, we can give ourselves by working in rolling bandages, making night shirts and other hospital supplies when the call is seen in the papers for volunteers for work.

Several years ago New York instituted what Dallas undertook last winter. Free legal advice for the poor, foreign or ignorant. Take this one case, right here in Waco. A poor negro couple had boarded for four days, where it seems their housekeeping had not paid his rent. The lander lord or his agent came and took the sewing machine and shot gun of these boarders for this unpaid rent, that they had nothing to do with, also knocking down a little child who protested. Now what could they do?

Another case, a poor Italian, with death and continued sickness in his family, borrowed $300 from a loan shark. He paid interest up to $300 and was then told he still owed $100 in interest and the original $300 principal, and if he did not pay it he would be thrown into prison. What could he do? He did not know the laws of the land as to usury. This free legal advice we must have and work for in the near future in Waco.

SHOULD PRACTICE PATRIOTISM.

Let us finish with less tragic things. Women, do we teach our children the patriotic songs of our country and do we also teach them the great battle hymns of the Christian church? We may know one verse of "Onward Christian Soldier," maybe all of "Nearer, My God, to Thee," but how many do we and our children really know, so that if we were sick in bed and wanted to say over these great hymns, we could pass the long hard night hours saying them silently to ourselves? Has it gone entirely out of fashion for the whole family on Sunday evenings to get around the piano and sing hymn after hymn?

Just one plea more for training our children, a story I saw in the New York Times. One day at St. Cloud, near Paris, a tiny boy picked a flower from a plant in one of the public gardens. His brother, a few years older, saw him and began to explain the nature of his crime, telling him that that flower belonged to the nation. With tears in his eyes the small boy went back and laid the little flower at the root of the parent plant and left it there. This is an illustration of the spirit of France and the civic spirit shown by its citizens.

May we teach our American children just such patriotism and now in closing let me quote what I heard at the Musical Federation in this city, "Let us get together, stay together, work together and grow together."

Lord Milner believes that the peace of the world could be preserved if the United States and Great Britain stood firmly together. He is one of several men who were prominently mentioned to succeed Lord Kitchener as secretary for war for England.

MORRELL-SHIRLEY WEDDING OBSERVED

Last Wednesday evening at 9 o'clock at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Melia Morrill, was performed the ceremony uniting in marriage her only daughter, Emma Julia, and Mr. Newton A. Shirley of Penelope, Rev. W. B. Holland of Clay Street Baptist church, officiating. The wedding was beautiful in its simplicity.

The parlors and reception hall were attractively decorated with daisies and ferns. The guests were welcomed at the door by the bride's mother, Mrs. Melia Morrill, and Mrs. W. G. Moran. Only relatives and a few intimate friends were present.

With Miss Yola Bellamy of Mart at the piano, the strains of Lohengrin's Wedding March was the signal for the entrance of the bride's attendants, Miss Nannie Dale Meers and Miss Mabel Moran. Miss Meers' dress was of white taffeta and net with a touch of shell pink. Miss Moran's dress was of embroidered net and blue messaline. The bride entered with the groom. She was attired in a beautiful gown of white taffeta and point de sprit. The bride and maids carried beautiful arm bouquets of Shasta daisies. The groom wore the conventional black.

An informal reception for the young couple was held immediately following the ceremony, during which their friends viewed the many handsome and useful gifts which attested the popularity of the young couple.

The bride presented her attendants, who were her childhood friends, with jeweled hair ornaments. Her going away gown was a suit of champagne taffeta with hat and accessories to match.

The bride is one of the most popular and charming young ladies of the South Side. The groom is a most progressive young business man of Penelope, where Mr. and Mrs. Shirley will make their future home. This wedding is the culmination of a happy romance begun while the bride was teaching in Penelope.

The out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. A. Shirley and son Clayton, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Smith and Mr. J. R. Hight of Penelope; Mr. and Mrs. L. Bellamy and daughters Flora and Yola of Mart, and Misses Bertha and Della Parrish, Miss Thelma Moran.

AMATEUR DRIVER WITH CHALMERS BEATS FLYER

NEWSPAPER MAN LOWERS RECORD OF FAMOUS DIXIE FLYER PASSENGER TRAIN.

Drives 125 Miles Between Atlanta and Chattanooga in Chalmers in Less Than Four Hours.

Drawing down the third American road record to be captured by a Chalmers Six-30 in the last three weeks, Homer C. George, newspaperman and amateur driver of Atlanta, Ga., has just lowered all road and rail records between Atlanta and Chattanooga, Tenn. Mr. George drove a five-passenger Chalmers touring car which has been used as a demonstrator by the Atlanta dealer for the last seven months.

In lowering the road record formerly held by K. T. McKinstry in a Reo Six, George also bettered the time of the famous Dixie Flyer, the fastest passenger train running in the South, by seven minutes. The 3,400 R. P. M. Chalmers made the 125 miles between Atlanta and Chattanooga in three hours and fifty-three minutes, or thirty-seven minutes faster than the Reo Six.

"Our record of thirty-three miles an hour for the trip is rendered all the more remarkable by the conditions under which the test was run," said Mr. George at the conclusion of his trip. "The car, a dealer's demonstrator, was fully equipped, and had received no special tuning up for the event. Twenty miles of the run were made through heavy rain and we were also held up in crossing the mountains and by meeting big droves of cattle on the road. The many sharp turns and twists in the mountain road made high speed work extremely dangerous and we had to slow down to a walking pace at times. The performance of the high-speed motor in the Chalmers Six-30 was absolutely faultless. Not a missed explosion or stop for repairs marred the trip and I believe faster time could be obtained by my car under more favorable weather conditions."

Mr. George was checked out from the Grady monument in the center of Atlanta's business district by Robert Moran, city editor of the Atlanta Constitution, at 3:40 a. m., June 24. He was checked at Chattanooga by W. G. Foster, sporting editor of the Chattanooga Times.

Eventually—Why Not Now?

BUZZWAGONS PASS JUNE BRIDE TOTAL

FOR FIRST TIME IN HISTORY, AUTOMOBILE LICENSES EXCEED THOSE FOR MARRIAGES.

In spite of the fact that June has always been known as the month of brides, the automobile salesman did more business than the parson during June, 1916. Probably for the first time in the history of McLennan county, the automobile licenses for the past thirty days exceeded the number of marriage licenses for the same period.

There was no perceptible falling off in the number of marriage licenses, which totalled one hundred and twenty, but the auto business simply passed all records, there being one hundred and forty-two proud owners of new cars, scattered over McLennan county. And scattered is right, for twenty of the new licenses are for persons living in Mart, eight from McGregor, six from Waco rural routes, five from West, two from Lorena and one each for Robinson, China Springs, Moody, Speegleville, Crawford and Elk.

More Fords were sold than any other make, there being sixty-one of this make. Other popular makes were sold as follows: Overland, 12; Chevrolet, 10; Buick, 9; Oakland, 6; Dodge, 5; Maxwell, 4; Chalmers, 4; Studebaker, 3; all others 28.

There are several reasons for the big increase in automobile sales. The most important one is that the people have more money than for several years. Then, too, there is such a demand for horses for Mexican preparedness and the European war that horseflesh is bringing high prices, and Texans can afford to sell their horses and buy autos.

The mobilization of troops at the border will call for enormous amounts of all sorts of feed, McLennan county farmers can sell their feed crops for a good figure and it would cost considerable to feed old Dobbin during the summer. Ergo, the automobile. The mobilization on the border will also make a ready and profitable market for all farm Texas products, and, with fine cotton prospects and the price soaring, everything points to an era of good old-fashioned prosperity.

The licenses issued during June, according to the records of County Clerk John W. Baker's office ,are as follows:

AMATEUR DRIVER WITH CHALMERS BEATS FLYER

NEWSPAPER MAN LOWERS RECORD OF FAMOUS DIXIE FLYER PASSENGER TRAIN.

Drives 125 Miles Between Atlanta and Chattanooga in Chalmers in Less Than Four Hours.

Drawing down the third American road record to be captured by a Chalmers Six-30 in the last three weeks, Homer C. George, newspaperman and amateur driver of Atlanta, Ga., has just lowered all road and rail records between Atlanta and Chattanooga, Tenn. Mr. George drove a five-passenger Chalmers touring car which has been used as a demonstrator by the Atlanta dealer for the last seven months.

In lowering the road record formerly held by K. T. McKinstry in a Reo Six, George also bettered the time of the famous Dixie Flyer, the fastest passenger train running in the South, by seven minutes. The 3,400 R. P. M. Chalmers made the 125 miles between Atlanta and Chattanooga in three hours and fifty-three minutes, or thirty-seven minutes faster than the Reo Six.

"Our record of thirty-three miles an hour for the trip is rendered all the more remarkable by the conditions under which the test was run," said Mr. George at the conclusion of his trip. "The car, a dealer's demonstrator, was fully equipped, and had received no special tuning up for the event. Twenty miles of the run were made through heavy rain and we were also held up in crossing the mountains and by meeting big droves of cattle on the road. The many sharp turns and twists in the mountain road made high speed work extremely dangerous and we had to slow down to a walking pace at times. The performance of the high-speed motor in the Chalmers Six-30 was absolutely faultless. Not a missed explosion or stop for repairs marred the trip and I believe faster time could be obtained by my car under more favorable weather conditions."

Mr. George was checked out from the Grady monument in the center of Atlanta's business district by Robert Moran, city editor of the Atlanta Constitution, at 3:40 a. m., June 24. He was checked at Chattanooga by W. G. Foster, sporting editor of the Chattanooga Times.

Son, Too, Hoists First Flag.

At the outbreak of the Civil War when President Lincoln issued the first call for volunteers, the first flag hoisted in Greenfield, Ind., was over the office of the Hancock Democrat by William Mitchell, editor and publisher, and fifty-five years later his son, John F. Mitchell, editor of the same paper, displayed the first flag in Greenfield on President Wilson's call for the state militia.—Indianapolis News.

BUZZWAGONS PASS JUNE BRIDE TOTAL

FOR FIRST TIME IN HISTORY, AUTOMOBILE LICENSES EXCEED THOSE FOR MARRIAGES.

In spite of the fact that June has always been known as the month of brides, the automobile salesman did more business than the parson during June, 1916. Probably for the first time in the history of McLennan county, the automobile licenses for the past thirty days exceeded the number of marriage licenses for the same period.

There was no perceptible falling off in the number of marriage licenses, which totalled one hundred and twenty, but the auto business simply passed all records, there being one hundred and forty-two proud owners of new cars, scattered over McLennan county. And scattered is right, for twenty of the new licenses are for persons living in Mart, eight from McGregor, six from Waco rural routes, five from West, two from Lorena and one each for Robinson, China Springs, Moody, Speegleville, Crawford and Elk.

More Fords were sold than any other make, there being sixty-one of this make. Other popular makes were sold as follows: Overland, 12; Chevrolet, 10; Buick, 9; Oakland, 6; Dodge, 5; Maxwell, 4; Chalmers, 4; Studebaker, 3; all others 28.

There are several reasons for the big increase in automobile sales. The most important one is that the people have more money than for several years. Then, too, there is such a demand for horses for Mexican preparedness and the European war that horseflesh is bringing high prices, and Texans can afford to sell their horses and buy autos.

The mobilization of troops at the border will call for enormous amounts of all sorts of feed, McLennan county farmers can sell their feed crops for a good figure and it would cost considerable to feed old Dobbin during the summer. Ergo, the automobile. The mobilization on the border will also make a ready and profitable market for all farm Texas products, and, with fine cotton prospects and the price soaring, everything points to an era of good old-fashioned prosperity.

The licenses issued during June, according to the records of County Clerk John W. Baker's office ,are as follows:

OVERLAND CAR LEADS IN JUNE AUTO SALES

POPULAR OVERLAND HEADS LIST IN AUTO SALES DURING THE MONTH OF JUNE.

The Overland car ran like a politician during the month of June, heading the list of cars sold in Waco over $500, there being twelve sold during the month. "And that is not the best of it," said Mr. Self of the Percy Willis Auto company. "Everyone of these twelve people, like the other Overland owners, are as proud of their decision as we are of the sales. It's a satisfaction to sell a car that delivers the goods from every standpoint, that gives the customer all and even more than he thinks he buys and that causes other people to buy. Business for June was very satisfactory and the prospects for July are even better. People are waking up to the fact that the Overland is an investment; that when you get in one you can go where you want to go; that the upkeep of it is the smallest possible and that it is a car that will sell after it is used a year or so."

The Percy Willis people are believers in printers' ink. They believe in keeping people informed about their products and also believe in backing up their statements with the goods. The Overland car has experienced the most remarkable sale of any car in its class and is meeting with general approval everywhere it is given a test.

Women are becoming more and more proficient automobile drivers. This is the opinion of Percy Willis, local Overland dealer.

"This development," said Mr. Willis in speaking of the increase in the number of women drivers, "is due largely to the many improvements in automobile construction. The engineers at our big Toledo plant, keeping in mind the use of all of our models by women as well as by men, have reduced the mechanism of our cars to simplicity itself.

"Today a woman steps into the car and takes a seat with confidence. Sitting upright in the seat she presses the magneto button in the switchbox on the steering column—a feature of all Overland and Willys-Knight models—and presses the toe-button to start the motor—no cranking is needed.

"She presses the clutch pedal—only a gentle pressure—and the clutch is released. The brakes work easily. No straining nor tugging, but just a light pull throws the lever from neutral to first, second or third speeds, or reverse. The steering wheel also works easily.

"To sound the warning signal she does not have to reach over the side of the car and squeeze a rubber bulb, nor does she have to press down on a hand signal. She touches another button in the switch-box just below the steering wheel and the horn sounds electrically.

"Instead of fussing around with matches to ignite oil or acetylene lamps, all that is required is a touch of another button in the switch-box. Two buttons control these lights, flashing them on bright or dim as desired."

Electric Control Buttons at Your Finger Tips

Naturally, you want a car that can be operated easily—you realize that the extent of pleasure and safety in driving depends upon the ease of control.

In most cars the details of control seem to be planned with an eye for convenience in assembling the various parts.

But the Overland control was arranged just as you would arrange it if you were designing a car for your own convenience.

You control the electric magneto, the electric lights, the electric horn, with your finger tips, without bending forward.

To start the motor you merely touch a foot button in the floor.

A woman or girl can drive the Overland in safety. Its control is easy and instinctive.

Let us tell you about the other Overland advantages.

Duke of Connaught Inspects Canadian Troops in Chalmers

His Highness, the Duke of Connaught, in his capacity as governor general of Canada, has probably inspected a greater number of troops in the last year than any other man in the British empire.

A good two-thirds of the Canadian Overseas contingent have passed under his critical eyes in the various training camps and recruiting points in Canada. During his recent visit to Port Arthur, Ont., to rview the troops of the Fifty-second battalion, now seeing active service in France, he used a Chalmers Six as a means of quick transportation. In the photograph taken in front of the Port Arthur armory, the duke of Connaught is seated at the left in the rear seat. At his side is Colonel Ruttan, district commander.

Wholesale Prices Obtained by System of Co-Operating Buying.

(From the New York Herald.)

Paris—Co-operative buying by associations of consumers is fast developing from the present food situation in France. They are likely to assume such proportions as to worry the dealers who have profited from the state of war to exact war profits on provisions that have been so abundant as to justify normal prices.

A well known actress, a woman lawyer and an authoress of renown form one of the "co-operatives," as they are called at the central markets. Three times a week they get out with their market baskets easrly enough to get to the "Halles" for the 7 o'clock sales, and by combining their requirements get nearly everything they need for the table at wholesale prices.

OVERLAND CAR LEADS IN JUNE AUTO SALES

POPULAR OVERLAND HEADS LIST IN AUTO SALES DURING THE MONTH OF JUNE.

The Overland car ran like a politician during the month of June, heading the list of cars sold in Waco over $500, there being twelve sold during the month. "And that is not the best of it," said Mr. Self of the Percy Willis Auto company. "Everyone of these twelve people, like the other Overland owners, are as proud of their decision as we are of the sales. It's a satisfaction to sell a car that delivers the goods from every standpoint, that gives the customer all and even more than he thinks he buys and that causes other people to buy. Business for June was very satisfactory and the prospects for July are even better. People are waking up to the fact that the Overland is an investment; that when you get in one you can go where you want to go; that the upkeep of it is the smallest possible and that it is a car that will sell after it is used a year or so."

The Percy Willis people are believers in printers' ink. They believe in keeping people informed about their products and also believe in backing up their statements with the goods. The Overland car has experienced the most remarkable sale of any car in its class and is meeting with general approval everywhere it is given a test.

Women are becoming more and more proficient automobile drivers. This is the opinion of Percy Willis, local Overland dealer.

"This development," said Mr. Willis in speaking of the increase in the number of women drivers, "is due largely to the many improvements in automobile construction. The engineers at our big Toledo plant, keeping in mind the use of all of our models by women as well as by men, have reduced the mechanism of our cars to simplicity itself.

"Today a woman steps into the car and takes a seat with confidence. Sitting upright in the seat she presses the magneto button in the switchbox on the steering column—a feature of all Overland and Willys-Knight models—and presses the toe-button to start the motor—no cranking is needed.

"She presses the clutch pedal—only a gentle pressure—and the clutch is released. The brakes work easily. No straining nor tugging, but just a light pull throws the lever from neutral to first, second or third speeds, or reverse. The steering wheel also works easily.

"To sound the warning signal she does not have to reach over the side of the car and squeeze a rubber bulb, nor does she have to press down on a hand signal. She touches another button in the switch-box just below the steering wheel and the horn sounds electrically.

"Instead of fussing around with matches to ignite oil or acetylene lamps, all that is required is a touch of another button in the switch-box. Two buttons control these lights, flashing them on bright or dim as desired."

Electric Control Buttons at Your Finger Tips

Naturally, you want a car that can be operated easily—you realize that the extent of pleasure and safety in driving depends upon the ease of control.

In most cars the details of control seem to be planned with an eye for convenience in assembling the various parts.

But the Overland control was arranged just as you would arrange it if you were designing a car for your own convenience.

You control the electric magneto, the electric lights, the electric horn, with your finger tips, without bending forward.

To start the motor you merely touch a foot button in the floor.

A woman or girl can drive the Overland in safety. Its control is easy and instinctive.

Let us tell you about the other Overland advantages.

Seven-Passenger Touring Car $1485. Five-Passenger $1020. Roadsters at $985 to $1550 f. o. b. Flint.

Many motorists demand the very utmost in an automobile. They want, first, a car with all the brute power that can be built into it. And with this great power they want carrying capacity—beauty of line and finish—fine appointments and a nameplate on the radiator for which their friends will feel an envious regard.

For this class of buyers the Buick Six is built. All Buicks are endowed with a Valve-in-Head motor that is the last word in power. Not a power that was suddenly discovered this year or last, but which has been evolved and perfected since the day motor car industry started.

This model of the Buick is designed for those who want a means of transportation, plus style, finish, roominess, prestige and sufficient reserve power.

It is the best the Buick has to offer, and that means the best that can be had. To pay more than the price asked for this car is useless extravagance. It is impossible to buy the utmost in motoring pleasure and satisfaction for less.

Every Buick principle attains its highest expression in this seven-passenger, Valve-in-Head, 6-cylinder Buick.

EMPLOYE OF THOMAS B. JEFFERY COMPANY SERVES WITH TRUCK SQUAD.

FAMINE PRICES FOR PIE

Jeffery Motor Truck Squad Does Valiant Work in Transporting Men and Supplies.

How an aeroplane killed a calf and the truck drivers exchanged empty gasoline cans for a chicken dinner are among the anecdotes related by George Kimball, a motor truck mechanic recently returned from Mexico. Kimball is one of the shop men sent to Mexico by the Thomas B. Jeffery company with the second contingent of fifty-four Jeffery Quad trucks. He arrived at El Paso, Texas, on March 21 last, with a trainload of trucks, drove overland with the Quads to Columbus, N. M., and was assigned to a truck train leaving for Mexico.

Along with the other civilian truck drivers, Kimball was rigged out with a new army uniform, a rifle with fifty rounds of ammunition and a Colt automatic with 100 cartridges, but was given strict orders not to do any shooting except in self-defense. In over two months of service in Mexico, not even a sniper fired at Kimball's truck train, and the only exciting experience with the Mexican inhabitants was in dickering with the native peddlers who sold food at famine prices to the American soldiers and truck drivers.

The first trip was to Bocas Grande, thirty-three miles across the border, passing, on the way, the grave of McKinney, one of the Americans murdered by Villa's bandits a short time before the raid on Columbus. The trucks were unloaded and returned to Columbus where the Jeffery men spent two days instructing the soldiers in the art of driving motor trucks. Meanwhile, another shipment of fifty-four Quads arrived at Columbus, and Kimball was assigned to truck No. 10 in Jeffery truck train No. 4 leaving for an eighteen days' trip into Mexico.

PASS THROUGH A WATERLESS DESERT.

The first day's run covered eighty-five miles through desert country. Ascension, a small army camp, was the first stop. Eight of the Quads unloaded supplies and ammunition for the soldiers, and the following day the trucks proceeded to Big Bend, twenty-seven miles further south. At Big Bend the empty trucks were assigned to passenger duty, transporting soldiers between camps. The return trip, to Ascension and back, was made in four and three-fourths hours, which was quick work, considering the heavy going. This run was mostly over prairie land, badly cut up by the transport vehicles, and including one rather steep mountain.

The eight truck drivers waited under orders at Big Bend for six days, expecting to transport soldiers to the scene of a rumored attack on the line of communications. But it was a false alarm. So the trucks were ordered to Casas Grandes, where they rejoined the rest of the train, which in the meantime had made a trip south to General Pershing's headquarters, "somewhere in Mexico." At the latter place it was very cold. The radiators were drained of water, to prevent damage from freezing, and in the morning the water in the buckets was covered with one and one-half inches of ice.

FAMINE PRICES ARE PAID FOR PIE.

During the early days of the expedition, before the commissariat was fully organized, the men often went hungry and thirsty. The native Mexicans and Chinamen reaped a fine harvest during this period. They would come into camp with seven or eight burros hitched to a little wagon, and bake pies to sell to the men "at seven different prices," as one of them put it. The prices charged were outrageous, and half of the stuff was not fit to eat.

Much of the country covered by the expedition is practically worthless at present. The only trees are cottonwoods growing along the rivers. There is good grazing land within a mile or so of the rivers, but the rest is desert, sparsely covered with mesquite and cactus. There seems to be no fish in the streams which usually dry up in the hot seasons. For miles and miles the only birds are buzzards, which live off the dead animals and men that line the trails and various battlefields. Where irrigation is practiced, as on the Corralitos and other American-owned ranches, the land is productive.

The people appear to be dazed most of the time. Their adobe houses are often in ruins as a result of bandit raids. They seem to have had all the ambition crushed out of them. At first they used to hide when the truck trains passed through. Later, when they found the Americans did not molest them, they stared at the trucks in a spirit of listless curiosity.

VILLA MONEY NO GOOD.

One little girl of about 7, with straight black hair, was more enterprising than the rest. She wanted to sell a few eggs to the soldiers. One of the doughboys, who had learned Spanish in the Philippines, acted as interpreter. A truck driver took the eggs and handed the girl a Villa dollar bill, but she quickly reached for her basket and handed back the money, saying that government paper wasn't good any more. Kimball then gave her a buffalo nickel, which she examined curiously. Then he gave her four more, whereupon her face lit up, and she gave him the eggs and thanked him prettily.

Chickens were not so cheap. They cost anywhere from $1 to $2 each, American money. At Namiquipa, however, the natives exchanged chickens for empty gasoline cans which the drivers were about to throw away after filling their truck tanks. The train crew got thirty chickens in this way, and there was a good supper in camp that night. The natives prize these cans very highly. They sell them for $2 apiece up in the mountains. The cans are used for carrying water.

WHO KILLED THE CALF?

At Big Bend, some of the boys brought in a calf, which duly appeared in edible form at breakfast the next morning. The captain immediately called for the camp cook, to ask him how he acquired the animal, for it was strictly against the rule to shoot, except in self-defense. "All I know, sir," said the cook, "is what I heard from some of the civilians. They said that an aeroplane flying overhead dropped a monkey wrench which hit the poor little calf on the head, sir, and being a perfectly good calf we thought we'd like to have him for breakfast, sir."

Kimball highly praised the soldiers with the truck train. They were excellent fellows, willing to do all in their power to assist. Their only amusements were poker and craps, the latter game being especially popular among the colored troopers. Within a couple of days of payday, practically all the soldiers' money would be in the pockets of one or two winners. The train crew were no respecters of property rights. Even the tin eating pans disappeared miraculously if left for a moment without a guardian. Tools for the trucks were especially prized as loot.

A MOTOR TRUCK CORRAL.

Only once was there any threat of trouble from Mexican bandits, as far as Jeffery truck train No. 4 was concerned. This happened at Las Cruces, where the train arrived one evening at 7 o'clock. The camp captain had been warned that an attack was to be made that night. So the trucks were corralled in a hollow circle, sentries were posted and the men ordered into the trenches. Everybody was nervous and excited. The truck drivers cleaned up their rifles and recovered their ammunition from the tool boxes of the trucks. There was little sleep that night, but nothing happened. Afterward it developed that the bandits in question raided a Mexican town about twenty miles away, where the natives were reported to have a lot of good American coin acquired from selling supplies to the soldiers. It's dangerous to have real money in Mexico.

Kimball was enthusiastic about the fine work done by the Jeffery Quad, which he attributes to the four-wheel drive, brake and steer features. His truck had no mechanical troubles except for a magneto adjustment due to the sticking of a contact, and a short delay to remove some grit from the needle valve of the carburetor. Even the tires were in good shape when he turned over the Quad to a soldier driver after running it 2,500 miles over some of the worst trails on the American continent.

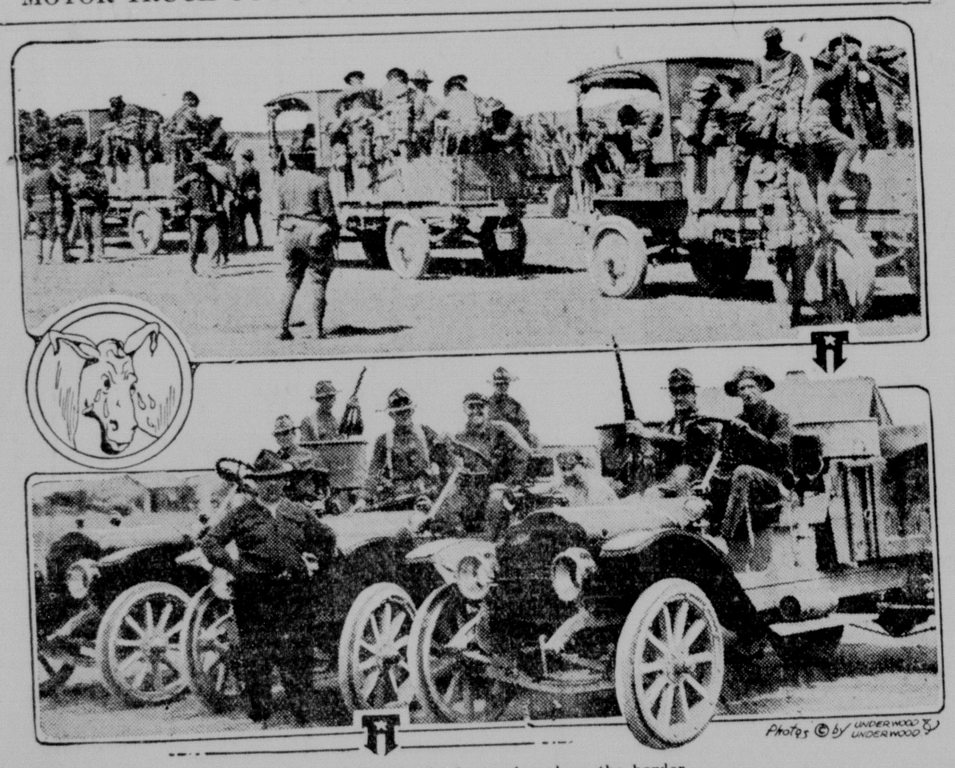
MOTOR TRUCK OUSTS MULE; CHAUFFEUR REPLACES TEAMSTER



Army motor trucks in service along the border.

Fort Sam Houston, July 1.—No department of the United States army has experienced such a marvelous transformation during the last few months as that which is charged with the duty of providing for the overland transportation of men and supplies. The introduction of the motor truck tells the story.

When Major General Frederick Funston issued the order for a punitive expedition under General Pershing to enter Mexico in pursuit of Villa there was a lamentable lack of motor truck equipment. It was then that the manufacturers of these vehicles showed themselves equal to the occasion. They turned out and shipped to El Paso and Columbus, N. M., enough trucks to meet the immediate and urgent demand. Since then this new branch of the army transportation service has expanded rapidly. Recently two special trains carrying eighty motor trucks direct from the factory arrived here and were added to this class of equipment already organized for duty on the Rio Grande border.

ARMY TEAMSTER IS PASSING.

The picturesque army teamster is rapidly passing, giving way to chauffeurs and mechanics.

One of the interesting tests to which the army trucks here were subjected was the moving of a regiment of infantry. The trucks were loaded with men and officers and a run of several hours was made through the streets of San Antonio and over the outlying country roads. It was a success in every respect.

Should it be found necessary to maintain the present large force of troops on the border for several months the construction of a military highway closely bordering the more than one thousand miles of river front will have been accomplished. Improvements are already being made to existing roads all through the border region in order to facilitate the movement of army motor trucks. Army engineers have found it necessary to repair and reconstruct parts of the highway that leads from the military supply base at Marathon to Boquillas, 110 miles. New roads are being laid out and constructed through isolated sections of the border. In the region extending from Eagle Pass to Brownsville a fairly good highway follows close to the Rio Grande for a distance of about 550 miles. The bad places in this road are being repaired under the direction of army engineers and it is expected that it will be in good shape for heavy motor truck traffic within a short time. The loaded trucks tear up the roads and constant work is required to keep them fit for service.

The movement which was inaugurated about two years ago by many communities in the border region for the construction of a federal military highway from the mouth of the Rio Grande to El Paso promises to be brought to successful accomplishment without any direct appropriation by army motor truck makes the building of such a road necessary, and the work is being rapidly done in order to furnish supplies to the patrol camps and to haul troops from place to place along the frontier.

Many of the motor truck chauffeurs and mechanicians who have been sent to the fild border region are having the experience of their lives. Most of these young men came here direct from Detroit, Indianapolis and other northern cities, and with hardly an exception they were new to not only military life, but they had no knowledge of this part of the country, and particularly were they ignorant of brush covering territory like that fronting on the Rio Grande. These new arrivals wanted to see a Mexican the first thing, and they usually had their curiosity satisfied before they reached San Antonio, as there are many of these natives of the cactus republic scattered along the railroads for one hundred miles north of here.

Many good natured pranks are played upon these new additions to the army contingent. In the different border camps they are initiated into the rough sports that are common to the ranch region. The wild life of the chaparral, including the congress, the introduction of the rattlesnakes, the tarantulas, the javelins, the deer, the bobcats and an occasional jaguar, abounds on all sides, and the young men from the north who came down here to drive the motor trucks do not find their long rides through the sparsely inhabited region at all monotonous.

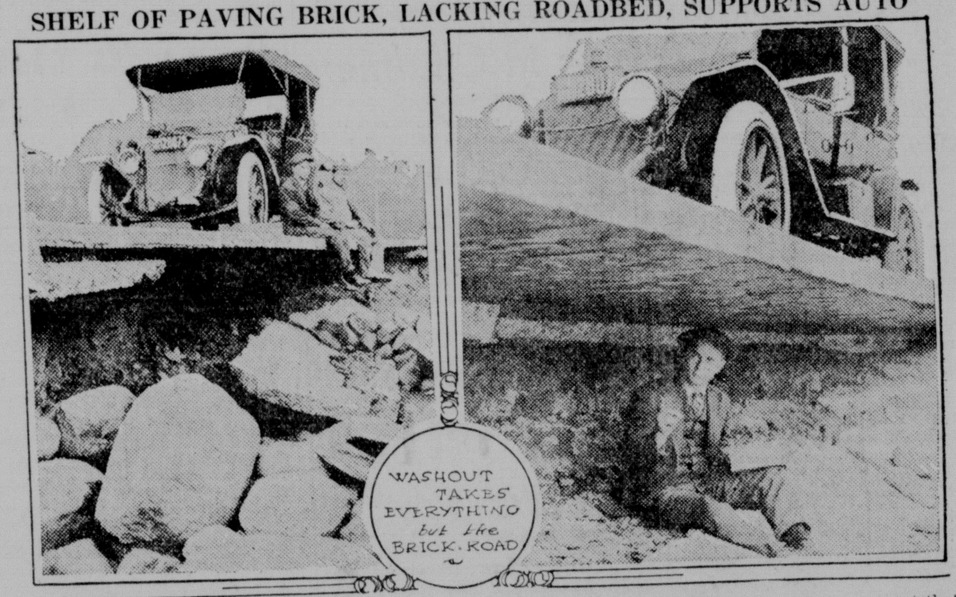
SHELF OF PAVING BRICK, LACKING ROADBED, SUPPORTS AUTO



As the result of a spring freshet in Killbuck creek, some sixty square yards of brick paving are doing duty near Wooster, O., undisturbed by the fact that the roadbed beneath is missing.

This shelf of grouted brick, in one place six feet in width, supports a loaded automobile without the slightest sign of yielding. The concrete base has fallen away and the strength of the remaining structure is derived wholly from the lateral cementing of the brick. Engineers pronounce it a remarkable demonstration of the beam strength to be attained by properly grouted brick.

The freshet that caused the damage overflowed the road for many hours. When the water receded, the embankment had been washed away for several hundred feet. For a distance of sixty feet the roadbed was undermined and the concrete base missing. Not a brick, however, had been disturbed. Traffic was cautious, at first, about using a pavement that had no roadbed beneath it, but confidence was gained with each succeeding trial and so far no warning sign of any sort has been placed upon the road and it is in use exactly as before the accident. Engineer Randall Barrett, of Wayne county, faces the unusual task of putting a roadbed under a pavement, instead of a pavement upon a road.

Between 225 and 250 miles of brick pavement is now under contract or proposed to be built in Ohio this year.

Buick D-6-55

Seven-Passenger Touring Car $1485. Five-Passenger $1020. Roadsters at $985 to $1550 f. o. b. Flint.

Many motorists demand the very utmost in an automobile. They want, first, a car with all the brute power that can be built into it. And with this great power they want carrying capacity—beauty of line and finish—fine appointments and a nameplate on the radiator for which their friends will feel an envious regard.

For this class of buyers the Buick Six is built. All Buicks are endowed with a Valve-in-Head motor that is the last word in power. Not a power that was suddenly discovered this year or last, but which has been evolved and perfected since the day motor car industry started.

This model of the Buick is designed for those who want a means of transportation, plus style, finish, roominess, prestige and sufficient reserve power.

It is the best the Buick has to offer, and that means the best that can be had. To pay more than the price asked for this car is useless extravagance. It is impossible to buy the utmost in motoring pleasure and satisfaction for less.

Every Buick principle attains its highest expression in this seven-passenger, Valve-in-Head, 6-cylinder Buick.

EMPLOYE OF THOMAS B. JEFFERY COMPANY SERVES WITH TRUCK SQUAD.

FAMINE PRICES FOR PIE

Jeffery Motor Truck Squad Does Valiant Work in Transporting Men and Supplies.

How an aeroplane killed a calf and the truck drivers exchanged empty gasoline cans for a chicken dinner are among the anecdotes related by George Kimball, a motor truck mechanic recently returned from Mexico. Kimball is one of the shop men sent to Mexico by the Thomas B. Jeffery company with the second contingent of fifty-four Jeffery Quad trucks. He arrived at El Paso, Texas, on March 21 last, with a trainload of trucks, drove overland with the Quads to Columbus, N. M., and was assigned to a truck train leaving for Mexico.

Along with the other civilian truck drivers, Kimball was rigged out with a new army uniform, a rifle with fifty rounds of ammunition and a Colt automatic with 100 cartridges, but was given strict orders not to do any shooting except in self-defense. In over two months of service in Mexico, not even a sniper fired at Kimball's truck train, and the only exciting experience with the Mexican inhabitants was in dickering with the native peddlers who sold food at famine prices to the American soldiers and truck drivers.

The first trip was to Bocas Grande, thirty-three miles across the border, passing, on the way, the grave of McKinney, one of the Americans murdered by Villa's bandits a short time before the raid on Columbus. The trucks were unloaded and returned to Columbus where the Jeffery men spent two days instructing the soldiers in the art of driving motor trucks. Meanwhile, another shipment of fifty-four Quads arrived at Columbus, and Kimball was assigned to truck No. 10 in Jeffery truck train No. 4 leaving for an eighteen days' trip into Mexico.

PASS THROUGH A WATERLESS DESERT.

The first day's run covered eighty-five miles through desert country. Ascension, a small army camp, was the first stop. Eight of the Quads unloaded supplies and ammunition for the soldiers, and the following day the trucks proceeded to Big Bend, twenty-seven miles further south. At Big Bend the empty trucks were assigned to passenger duty, transporting soldiers between camps. The return trip, to Ascension and back, was made in four and three-fourths hours, which was quick work, considering the heavy going. This run was mostly over prairie land, badly cut up by the transport vehicles, and including one rather steep mountain.

The eight truck drivers waited under orders at Big Bend for six days, expecting to transport soldiers to the scene of a rumored attack on the line of communications. But it was a false alarm. So the trucks were ordered to Casas Grandes, where they rejoined the rest of the train, which in the meantime had made a trip south to General Pershing's headquarters, "somewhere in Mexico." At the latter place it was very cold. The radiators were drained of water, to prevent damage from freezing, and in the morning the water in the buckets was covered with one and one-half inches of ice.

FAMINE PRICES ARE PAID FOR PIE.

During the early days of the expedition, before the commissariat was fully organized, the men often went hungry and thirsty. The native Mexicans and Chinamen reaped a fine harvest during this period. They would come into camp with seven or eight burros hitched to a little wagon, and bake pies to sell to the men "at seven different prices," as one of them put it. The prices charged were outrageous, and half of the stuff was not fit to eat.

Much of the country covered by the expedition is practically worthless at present. The only trees are cottonwoods growing along the rivers. There is good grazing land within a mile or so of the rivers, but the rest is desert, sparsely covered with mesquite and cactus. There seems to be no fish in the streams which usually dry up in the hot seasons. For miles and miles the only birds are buzzards, which live off the dead animals and men that line the trails and various battlefields. Where irrigation is practiced, as on the Corralitos and other American-owned ranches, the land is productive.

The people appear to be dazed most of the time. Their adobe houses are often in ruins as a result of bandit raids. They seem to have had all the ambition crushed out of them. At first they used to hide when the truck trains passed through. Later, when they found the Americans did not molest them, they stared at the trucks in a spirit of listless curiosity.

VILLA MONEY NO GOOD.

One little girl of about 7, with straight black hair, was more enterprising than the rest. She wanted to sell a few eggs to the soldiers. One of the doughboys, who had learned Spanish in the Philippines, acted as interpreter. A truck driver took the eggs and handed the girl a Villa dollar bill, but she quickly reached for her basket and handed back the money, saying that government paper wasn't good any more. Kimball then gave her a buffalo nickel, which she examined curiously. Then he gave her four more, whereupon her face lit up, and she gave him the eggs and thanked him prettily.

Chickens were not so cheap. They cost anywhere from $1 to $2 each, American money. At Namiquipa, however, the natives exchanged chickens for empty gasoline cans which the drivers were about to throw away after filling their truck tanks. The train crew got thirty chickens in this way, and there was a good supper in camp that night. The natives prize these cans very highly. They sell them for $2 apiece up in the mountains. The cans are used for carrying water.

WHO KILLED THE CALF?

At Big Bend, some of the boys brought in a calf, which duly appeared in edible form at breakfast the next morning. The captain immediately called for the camp cook, to ask him how he acquired the animal, for it was strictly against the rule to shoot, except in self-defense. "All I know, sir," said the cook, "is what I heard from some of the civilians. They said that an aeroplane flying overhead dropped a monkey wrench which hit the poor little calf on the head, sir, and being a perfectly good calf we thought we'd like to have him for breakfast, sir."

Kimball highly praised the soldiers with the truck train. They were excellent fellows, willing to do all in their power to assist. Their only amusements were poker and craps, the latter game being especially popular among the colored troopers. Within a couple of days of payday, practically all the soldiers' money would be in the pockets of one or two winners. The train crew were no respecters of property rights. Even the tin eating pans disappeared miraculously if left for a moment without a guardian. Tools for the trucks were especially prized as loot.

A MOTOR TRUCK CORRAL.

Only once was there any threat of trouble from Mexican bandits, as far as Jeffery truck train No. 4 was concerned. This happened at Las Cruces, where the train arrived one evening at 7 o'clock. The camp captain had been warned that an attack was to be made that night. So the trucks were corralled in a hollow circle, sentries were posted and the men ordered into the trenches. Everybody was nervous and excited. The truck drivers cleaned up their rifles and recovered their ammunition from the tool boxes of the trucks. There was little sleep that night, but nothing happened. Afterward it developed that the bandits in question raided a Mexican town about twenty miles away, where the natives were reported to have a lot of good American coin acquired from selling supplies to the soldiers. It's dangerous to have real money in Mexico.

Kimball was enthusiastic about the fine work done by the Jeffery Quad, which he attributes to the four-wheel drive, brake and steer features. His truck had no mechanical troubles except for a magneto adjustment due to the sticking of a contact, and a short delay to remove some grit from the needle valve of the carburetor. Even the tires were in good shape when he turned over the Quad to a soldier driver after running it 2,500 miles over some of the worst trails on the American continent.

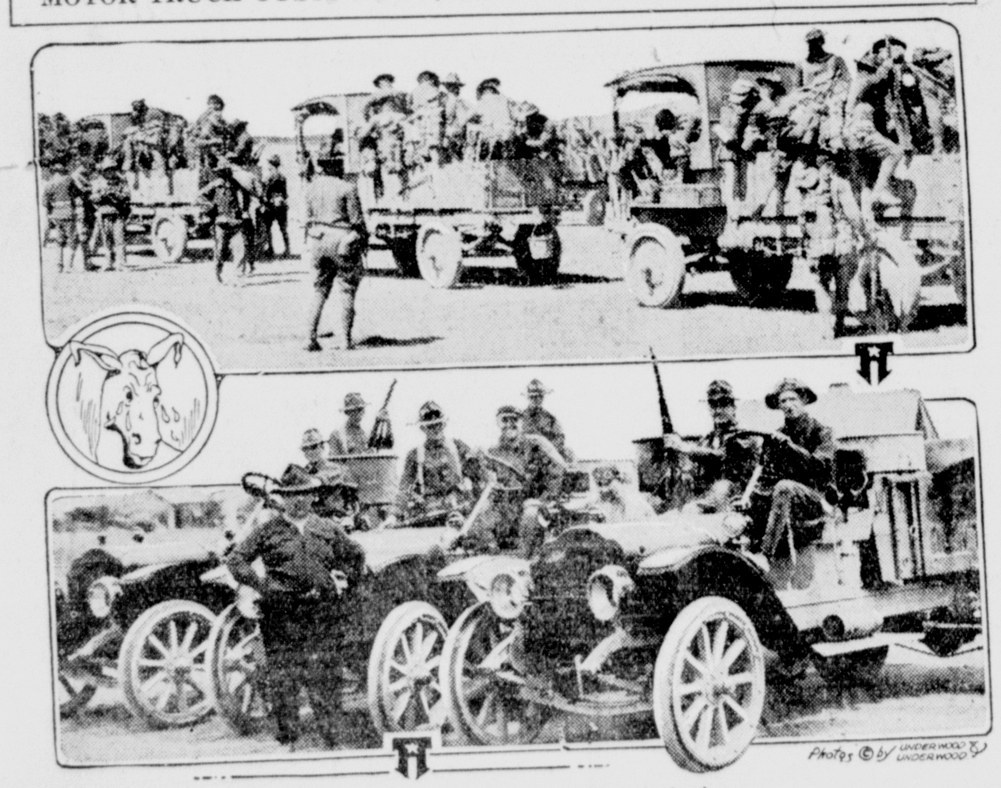
MOTOR TRUCK OUSTS MULE; CHAUFFEUR REPLACES TEAMSTER



Army motor trucks in service along the border.

Fort Sam Houston, July 1.—No department of the United States army has experienced such a marvelous transformation during the last few months as that which is charged with the duty of providing for the overland transportation of men and supplies. The introduction of the motor truck tells the story.

When Major General Frederick Funston issued the order for a punitive expedition under General Pershing to enter Mexico in pursuit of Villa there was a lamentable lack of motor truck equipment. It was then that the manufacturers of these vehicles showed themselves equal to the occasion. They turned out and shipped to El Paso and Columbus, N. M., enough trucks to meet the immediate and urgent demand. Since then this new branch of the army transportation service has expanded rapidly. Recently two special trains carrying eighty motor trucks direct from the factory arrived here and were added to this class of equipment already organized for duty on the Rio Grande border.

ARMY TEAMSTER IS PASSING.

The picturesque army teamster is rapidly passing, giving way to chauffeurs and mechanics.

One of the interesting tests to which the army trucks here were subjected was the moving of a regiment of infantry. The trucks were loaded with men and officers and a run of several hours was made through the streets of San Antonio and over the outlying country roads. It was a success in every respect.

Should it be found necessary to maintain the present large force of troops on the border for several months the construction of a military highway closely bordering the more than one thousand miles of river front will have been accomplished. Improvements are already being made to existing roads all through the border region in order to facilitate the movement of army motor trucks. Army engineers have found it necessary to repair and reconstruct parts of the highway that leads from the military supply base at Marathon to Boquillas, 110 miles. New roads are being laid out and constructed through isolated sections of the border. In the region extending from Eagle Pass to Brownsville a fairly good highway follows close to the Rio Grande for a distance of about 550 miles. The bad places in this road are being repaired under the direction of army engineers and it is expected that it will be in good shape for heavy motor truck traffic within a short time. The loaded trucks tear up the roads and constant work is required to keep them fit for service.

The movement which was inaugurated about two years ago by many communities in the border region for the construction of a federal military highway from the mouth of the Rio Grande to El Paso promises to be brought to successful accomplishment without any direct appropriation by army motor truck makes the building of such a road necessary, and the work is being rapidly done in order to furnish supplies to the patrol camps and to haul troops from place to place along the frontier.

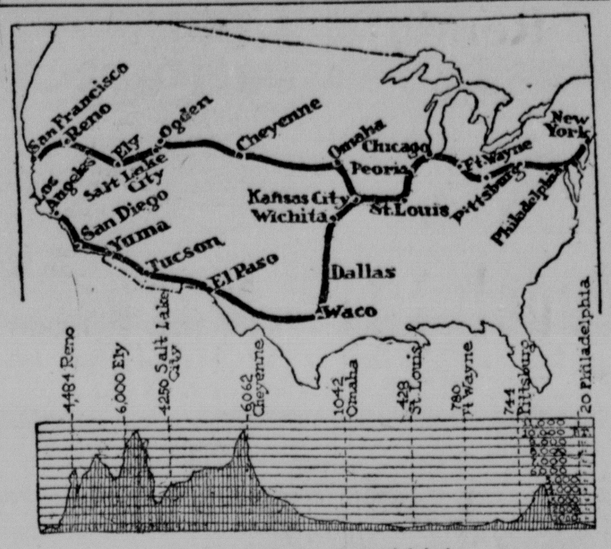
FORTY FLYERS IN COAST TO COAST RACE SEPT. 2; BIG PRIZES OFFERED



One proposed route for aerial derby.

New York, July 1.—Although the great ocean-to-ocean aero race from New York to the Pacific coast September 2 is yet many weeks off, all doubt as to the quick response that would be forthcoming from aeronauts, the makers of aircraft and scientists, and savants of the most modern of mankind's wonderful achievements, was dispelled almost from the instant that the consequent arrangement of a permanent aerial highway across the continent was announced.

Already the number of entrants for the classic has passed the thirty mark, with every indication that in a week or ten days more than forty flyers will be registered as candidates for the winning of the Pulitzer trophy and the prizes, which will range from $20,000 to the winner to $1,500 to the eighth man in the race, with prizes apportionately between and countless prizes for special feats.

The concern of the originators of the national aerial derby, therefore, as to the race calling forth the most expert flyers and the newest, swiftest and finest aggregation of aeroplanes is now past. That which is engaging the liveliest attention of the contest committee of the Aero club of America at the present time is the mapping out of the route over which the airmen will fight their way from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Each of the 200 to 250 cities to be designated as "controls" or stopping places along the route will constitute, as it were, a sort of sectional grandstand. To each of these cities will flock from hundreds of miles around thousands who will be eager to witness a phase of the great race that will be written prominently in the history of aviation for all time.

ALL THINK IT WILL THRILL.

Legislators, scientists, men of prominence in all professions who possess modern minds have joined in declaring that the national aerial derby will be a great and thrilling object lesson to the entire nation. They all declare it will be a spectacle to arouse public interest, and that a great impetus will be given by it in the development of flying not only as a sport, not only as an essential, powerful arm for military purposes, but in its other equally interesting aspects as an agent of commerce, a carrier of mails and in the end a rival of railroads and steamships in the transportation of people and freight. It is only a decade ago that people watched an aviator take the air with the conviction that he was flirting with death. Since then accidents due to scientific defects in flying machines have become rare, and in a few years more, with the strides that are being made in effecting the stabilizing of aeroplanes, one may ride in an aircraft with even greater safety than one now rides in a motor car on crowded highways.

The route makers of the contest committee of the Aero club have two lines of transcontinental passage in mind. It will rest with the interior cities of the country, as well as the cities situated on the eastern coast, to make the Pacific terminal of the race, and this course will be taken. From $125,000 to $150,000 will be necessary to finance the big race, of which the Aero club has already donated $20,000. The Pacific terminal city is expected to do likewise. From cities of the first size whose progressiveness makes them eager to have the municipality designated as a landing place for the ocean-to-ocean racers—such as Pittsburg, Chicago, Kansas City, St. Louis and the like, the contest committee will ask contributions of $10,000 each. Other contributions will be fixed according to the city's size.

FLYERS IN AIR HALF THE TIME.

The contestants, as already announced, will be daily twelve hours in the air and will rest twelve hours at each of the 'control" or landing places. Not only will full opportunity be thus afforded the public of many populous centers to see the spectacle of the race, but they will have an opportunity to observe the very latest makes and improvement in air machines, and to acquaint themselves with the personalities of the crack flyers. Between controls the contest committee have devised special features of attraction to supply thrills and excitement locally. For instance, special prizes will be accorded the flyers in racing between controls, special prizes for expert landing and starting, and for the happiest and cleverest messages of greeting that they shall cast with fluttering silken streamers into the crowds at the landing stations.

One route under consideration follows the Lincoln Highway almost rigidly save for a dip to St. Louis and Kansas City. These two cities have also a place on the other, or southern route. The Aero club has sent a circular of the project to all the chambers of commerce designated on each route and from all sources have come replies indicating an enthusiastic consideration of the project and a likelihood that the cities will readily meet the financial requirements that a place on the route of the national aerial derby necessitates.

ENGLAND REALIZES WISDOM OF ECONOMY

Yet the Realization of Being Able to Contribute Their Small Earnings for Support of Trops Gives Pleasure.

London.—(Correspondence of the Associated Press.)—Now that England is putting all of herself into the war, the serious effort of all classes to aid by the strictest economy may be observed on every hand.

In the words of an expert at the treasury: "Englishmen, especially the working classes, ordinarily regard strict economy as a mean thing to practice, but the belief gradually is taking hold of them that victory cannot be attained unless the civilians left behind carry out the full duty of saving their money and placing it at the disposal of the government for the prosecution of the conflict."

The part being played by the working classes in this national economy stands out prominently in the everyday life. During the first twelve weeks of the sale of the government's war saving certificates working people paid into the treasury $11,655,000, or an average of $970,000 weekly. The purchasers ranged from munitions workers and farm hands to servant girls and tea-shop waitresses. The certificates yield interest at five per cent, compounded for five years, being purchased at about $3.72 (fifteen shillings and six pence), and entitling the owner at the expiration of the five years to $4.87 (a pound).

In addition to that sum, the working classes are responsible for a large share of the total of $200,565,000 that has been paid through the postoffice and Trustee Savings banks for portions of the four and a half per cent war loan. Then again they have had a share in the $100,000,000 worth of postoffice exchequer bonds purchased during eighteen weeks up to May 13 last.

Yet conditions here are paradoxical. Perhaps no such stiuation ever existed in any country before . While large numbers of people, either through depreciation in their trades or an increase in prices and taxation, are no further from the margin of subsistence than they were in peace time, others are being employed on a scale hitherto unknown and therefore have larger incomes than ever.

These include women, boys and elderly men; and women in receipt of separation allowances through the service of their sons or soldier-husbands, as well as old-age pensioners. Families whose normal wage-earners are enjoying no increase have surplus incomes through the combined efforts of the several members.

That is why the shops in London are, in many instances, doing better than for many years. These include the diamond and jewelry mart in Hatton Gardens, where a big boom is in progress as a result of the new custom of the munitions workers in investing their surplus income in such adornments. It is a new ratio of the distribution of wealth that England is now enjoying, and thousands of homes are enjoying comforts and even slight luxuries that they never before possessed or hoped to possess.

The working classes seem to have more pleasure in life and more pride. The world-war has brought them their opportunity, and it is as a result of this unexpected chance that they are able to hand over such liberal sums toward paying for the war.

The totals mentioned as showing the participation of the working classes, though reflecting their spirit to aid, give but the slightest idea of how the war has revealed another thing—the tremendous investing reserve of the population. The latter point is illustrated by the fact that the English have raised since the beginning of the war by loans of various kinds in the United Kingdom alone a total of $9,265,000,000.

The war's cost to Britain during the current year alone is reckoned at almost as large a sum as that total, or at $8,000,000,000. The problem of grasping the significance of so vast a sum is, of course, almost impossible for the average man. A faint idea of its meaning, however, may be gained by comparing it with the fact that the total value of the exports of the United States last year was $3,500,000,000, perhaps the largest in the nation's history.

The manner in which the national war savings committee has organized and is conducting the task of saving is in keeping with the tradition of British thoroughness. It is a revelation. The committee, under the chairmanship of the Right Hon. G. N. Barnes, a well known labor member of parliament, includes active business men and economists and financial exports of recognized ability.

One of the supreme tasks of the committee has been to see that the country strikes the golden mean in the matter of paying for the war out of her $75,000,000,000 of accumulated wealth, through selling back securities representing investments in neutral countries ,and by tapping the income of the people.

Five hundred local central committees, branches of the larger organization, have been organized throughout the country and are working with the sympathetic support of the local authorities. The latter include schools and colleges, churches and religious associations of all kinds, trade unions, men's brotherhoods, women's societies and federations, friendly societies, cooperative societies and similar bodies.

It is the influence and practical assistance of all of these organizations throughout the United Kingdom that has managed to roll up so many millions sterling toward paying for the conflict.

Something of the tremendous task in saving confronting the United Kingdom was indicated to the Associated Press by a financial expert of recognized ability.

"By his budget for the current fiscal year, from the end of March last to the first of next April, the chancellor of the exchequer arranged to raise by taxation 500 millions sterling," he said. "According to the requirements of the war that left thirteen hundred millions to be found in some other way. That other way is saving. We can best attain our end in this way by refraining from buying things which we can safely do without, thus liberating labor, machinery and capital and rendering it available for the purposes of the government in prosecuting the war.

"We reckon that the flower of our industrial manhood having gone into the army and navy, all those that are left behind are likewise needed for the purpose of winning the war. Our feeling is that we have no right to ask them to work for us in the production of things with which we can easily do without. So that by systematic saving in this respect we shall be increasing our export trade, by means of which we obtain the sinews of war at this time.

"It has been truly said that every shilling spent unnecessarily on ourselves is given to Germany, and every shilling saved strengthens the cause for which we are fighting. Because everything from abroad used here aids in increasing our debt to foreign nations and thus impairing our financial position, we are making a particular effort to save on articles from abroad. We firmly believe that by systematic saving we can shorten the war.

"The incentive of the people as a whole to save is also explained by the tremendous figures of the national revenue and expenditures. The national revenue for the year ending March 31, 1916, was $1,683,825,000. This sum was $550,365,000 more than the revenue for 1914-15, and by far the largest sum ever paid into the treasury in any single year in the nation's history, the increase being due to the new sources of taxation discovered by Reginald McKenna, chancellor of the exchequer. But the expenditure chargeable against this revenue was $7,795,790,000, a sum which is nearly $5,000,000 in excess of the expenditure over income in the year 1914-15. There will be a similar excess of expenditure over income in the current year; the demands being made on the treasury are, in fact, greater than they have ever been."

The government's very latest expedient for raising revenue is the war expenditure certificate, issued June 3 under a special act by the lords commissioners of the treasury, in amounts of 1,000, 5,000 and 10,000 pounds—roughly $5,000, $25,000 and $50,000, respectively.

These certificates run for two years from the date of issue at the price, for the time being, of 90 per cent. They are in effect treasury bills, so that the price represents a discount rate of 5 per cent per annum. The investment return on the capital invested is correspondingly higher, being a trifle over 5½ per cent per annum reckoned at simple interest added at the end of two years.

At the present moment, just after the first of the new certificates have been issued, it looks as though they might be a competitor of the successful twelve months' treasury bill, and also of the new exchequer bonds.

No better illustration of the genuine concern of every portion of the population to aid in the movement for national economy is to be found than the plan, recently formulated, of asking for subscriptions to enable each child in the London county council schools and the Church of England schools to start a savings bank account with a shilling. So successful has the movement been that officials of the government have given the subject in several instances individual attention. The chancellor of the exchequer and Mrs. Reginald McKenna recently presented bank books, each credited with a shilling, to 400 school children in the Surrey villages of Alton-on-the-Hill and Tadworth. Others are now following the chancellor's example in different portions of the country.

The spirit of the children was shown in Liverpool, where, by collecting and selling medicine bottles, they raised money to purchase an ambulance for the Red Cross society.

After Yuan Shi Kai, What Next in Troubled China?

Peking, China, July 1.—What may China expect from Li-Yuan-hung, the new president of the republic and successor of Yuan Shi Kai? The career of Yuan-Hung is, like that of Yuan, far more a military and official career than that of a popular liberator. But there is this great distinction—Li has come far more under southern influence, and that means liberal influence, than his predecessor. The new president comes from the great mid-Yangtse province of Tupeh, where he was born fifty-two years ago of middle-class parents of moderate means. He illustrates the motley official life of the Chinese in that he has been both a naval officer and a major of cavalry. A graduate of the Peiyang naval college, he was stationed aboard a Chinese cruiser and saw service during the Japanese war. After the war, and a course of military study in Japan, where he specialized in fortifications, he became a protege of the great viceroy, Chang Chitung, who, from being a pioneer in the students' overseas education movement, had always a marked partiality for brilliant young men.

He followed Chang from Nanking to Wuchang, where he was made a colonel, and where, as a pioneer in army re-organization he planned the Changtem maneuvers of 1903. He showed his liberal qualities when, on being appointed military governor at Wuchang, he voluntarily abdicated the civil side of his power to a separate civil administration, the first act of the kind on the part of any Chinese military governor up to that time.

CAST LOT WITH REVOLUTION.

When the revolution of 1911 broke out, Li was still a colonel, and was absolutely unknown save to the narrow administrative circles of his life around Wuchang and Hankow. A bomb went off, a list of conspirators was discovered, and a sudden rising, thus prematurely enforced, struck at the vitals of the natino with the capture of the Hanyang arsenal on October 10, 1911. There was no leader, save a boy, Liu King, a student just home from Japan. Other leaders were coming, but most of them, like Sun Yat-Sen in London, were caught unawares, and were far away. Liu King went to see Colonel Li. Li demurred, doubted, thought it was a foolhardy risk. The boy ordered his escort of soldiers to draw their swords and present them at Colonel Li's breast. They did so, and, according to the story of those early days, which has never been denied by Li himself, the military governor was thus "persuaded" to cast in his lot with the revolution.

Li Yuan-hung (new photograph).

Once in, he was the most energetic and effective leader on the southern side, and directed the sanguinary and desperate battles around Hankow with loyad skill and determination. He figured prominently in the subsequent peace conference at Shanghai, and when Yuan loomed up bigger and bigger as the only ultimate choice for president, he was nominated as the most likely counterpoise to his ambitions as vice president, and duly elected.

HE PLAYS YUAN'S GAME.

In the four stormy years that have followed, Li Yuan Hung has more often played Yuan's game than any other. When his southern associates were driven from the country in 1913, he stood with the government and held the Wuhan cities against the rebels. At the end of that year he was summoned to Peking and it has been commonly assumed since that time that he has been practically a prisoner in the Forbidden City. Only with the monarchial movement did he begin again to take an active part in the government. Last year he was made president of the Chang Tsang-yuan, or advisory council, on a constitutional precedent as to the duties of the vice president strikingly American. This council is the only deliberate body left in Peking, and Li used his office to oppose the monarchy at the risk of his head. Indeed, when that movement had all but succeeded last December, Li Yuan-hung placed himself on record by definitely resigning his high post. Since that time he has been regarded as the man true to republican principles on which all parties would be most likely to agree.

He is not a dominating personality, and is not expected to insist on those autocratic prerogatives of the presidency which made Yuan's tenure of office incompatible with constitutionalism. Indeed, Li Yuan-hung is generally believed to have made up his mind to be president more after the French manner, or, at most, after the American manner, with plenty of room for the growth of a sound and constitutional parliament and the rehabilitation of constitutional machinery in general is expected to be among the first acts of his administration.

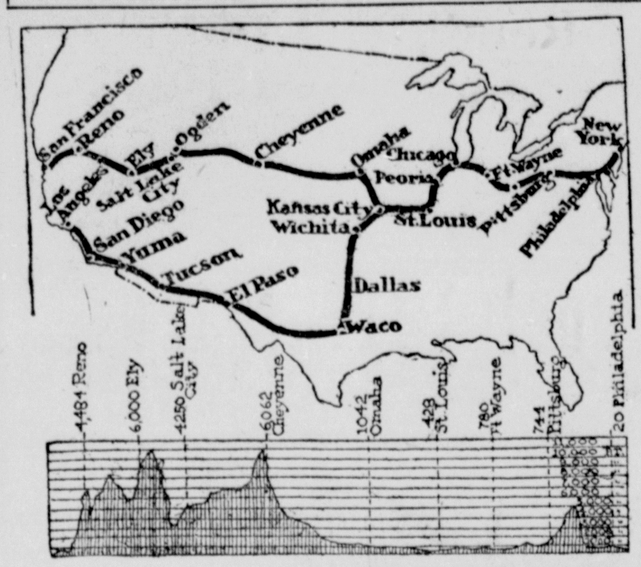
FORTY FLYERS IN COAST TO COAST RACE SEPT. 2; BIG PRIZES OFFERED



One proposed route for aerial derby.

New York, July 1.—Although the great ocean-to-ocean aero race from New York to the Pacific coast September 2 is yet many weeks off, all doubt as to the quick response that would be forthcoming from aeronauts, the makers of aircraft and scientists, and savants of the most modern of mankind's wonderful achievements, was dispelled almost from the instant that the consequent arrangement of a permanent aerial highway across the continent was announced.

Already the number of entrants for the classic has passed the thirty mark, with every indication that in a week or ten days more than forty flyers will be registered as candidates for the winning of the Pulitzer trophy and the prizes, which will range from $20,000 to the winner to $1,500 to the eighth man in the race, with prizes apportionately between and countless prizes for special feats.

The concern of the originators of the national aerial derby, therefore, as to the race calling forth the most expert flyers and the newest, swiftest and finest aggregation of aeroplanes is now past. That which is engaging the liveliest attention of the contest committee of the Aero club of America at the present time is the mapping out of the route over which the airmen will fight their way from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Each of the 200 to 250 cities to be designated as "controls" or stopping places along the route will constitute, as it were, a sort of sectional grandstand. To each of these cities will flock from hundreds of miles around thousands who will be eager to witness a phase of the great race that will be written prominently in the history of aviation for all time.

ALL THINK IT WILL THRILL.

Legislators, scientists, men of prominence in all professions who possess modern minds have joined in declaring that the national aerial derby will be a great and thrilling object lesson to the entire nation. They all declare it will be a spectacle to arouse public interest, and that a great impetus will be given by it in the development of flying not only as a sport, not only as an essential, powerful arm for military purposes, but in its other equally interesting aspects as an agent of commerce, a carrier of mails and in the end a rival of railroads and steamships in the transportation of people and freight. It is only a decade ago that people watched an aviator take the air with the conviction that he was flirting with death. Since then accidents due to scientific defects in flying machines have become rare, and in a few years more, with the strides that are being made in effecting the stabilizing of aeroplanes, one may ride in an aircraft with even greater safety than one now rides in a motor car on crowded highways.

The route makers of the contest committee of the Aero club have two lines of transcontinental passage in mind. It will rest with the interior cities of the country, as well as the cities situated on the eastern coast, to make the Pacific terminal of the race, and this course will be taken. From $125,000 to $150,000 will be necessary to finance the big race, of which the Aero club has already donated $20,000. The Pacific terminal city is expected to do likewise. From cities of the first size whose progressiveness makes them eager to have the municipality designated as a landing place for the ocean-to-ocean racers—such as Pittsburg, Chicago, Kansas City, St. Louis and the like, the contest committee will ask contributions of $10,000 each. Other contributions will be fixed according to the city's size.

FLYERS IN AIR HALF THE TIME.

The contestants, as already announced, will be daily twelve hours in the air and will rest twelve hours at each of the 'control" or landing places. Not only will full opportunity be thus afforded the public of many populous centers to see the spectacle of the race, but they will have an opportunity to observe the very latest makes and improvement in air machines, and to acquaint themselves with the personalities of the crack flyers. Between controls the contest committee have devised special features of attraction to supply thrills and excitement locally. For instance, special prizes will be accorded the flyers in racing between controls, special prizes for expert landing and starting, and for the happiest and cleverest messages of greeting that they shall cast with fluttering silken streamers into the crowds at the landing stations.

One route under consideration follows the Lincoln Highway almost rigidly save for a dip to St. Louis and Kansas City. These two cities have also a place on the other, or southern route. The Aero club has sent a circular of the project to all the chambers of commerce designated on each route and from all sources have come replies indicating an enthusiastic consideration of the project and a likelihood that the cities will readily meet the financial requirements that a place on the route of the national aerial derby necessitates.

Bids Wanted.

Sealed bids will be received until 5 p. m., Monday, July 3, 1916, by B. B. Cobb, secretary school board, for certain alterations to be made in South Eighth street school building. Plans and specifications may be obtained at the office of Supt. B. B. Cobb.

The right is reserved to accept any or to reject all bids.

Yet the Realization of Being Able to Contribute Their Small Earnings for Support of Trops Gives Pleasure.

London.—(Correspondence of the Associated Press.)—Now that England is putting all of herself into the war, the serious effort of all classes to aid by the strictest economy may be observed on every hand.

In the words of an expert at the treasury: "Englishmen, especially the working classes, ordinarily regard strict economy as a mean thing to practice, but the belief gradually is taking hold of them that victory cannot be attained unless the civilians left behind carry out the full duty of saving their money and placing it at the disposal of the government for the prosecution of the conflict."

The part being played by the working classes in this national economy stands out prominently in the everyday life. During the first twelve weeks of the sale of the government's war saving certificates working people paid into the treasury $11,655,000, or an average of $970,000 weekly. The purchasers ranged from munitions workers and farm hands to servant girls and tea-shop waitresses. The certificates yield interest at five per cent, compounded for five years, being purchased at about $3.72 (fifteen shillings and six pence), and entitling the owner at the expiration of the five years to $4.87 (a pound).

In addition to that sum, the working classes are responsible for a large share of the total of $200,565,000 that has been paid through the postoffice and Trustee Savings banks for portions of the four and a half per cent war loan. Then again they have had a share in the $100,000,000 worth of postoffice exchequer bonds purchased during eighteen weeks up to May 13 last.

Yet conditions here are paradoxical. Perhaps no such stiuation ever existed in any country before . While large numbers of people, either through depreciation in their trades or an increase in prices and taxation, are no further from the margin of subsistence than they were in peace time, others are being employed on a scale hitherto unknown and therefore have larger incomes than ever.

These include women, boys and elderly men; and women in receipt of separation allowances through the service of their sons or soldier-husbands, as well as old-age pensioners. Families whose normal wage-earners are enjoying no increase have surplus incomes through the combined efforts of the several members.

That is why the shops in London are, in many instances, doing better than for many years. These include the diamond and jewelry mart in Hatton Gardens, where a big boom is in progress as a result of the new custom of the munitions workers in investing their surplus income in such adornments. It is a new ratio of the distribution of wealth that England is now enjoying, and thousands of homes are enjoying comforts and even slight luxuries that they never before possessed or hoped to possess.

The working classes seem to have more pleasure in life and more pride. The world-war has brought them their opportunity, and it is as a result of this unexpected chance that they are able to hand over such liberal sums toward paying for the war.

The totals mentioned as showing the participation of the working classes, though reflecting their spirit to aid, give but the slightest idea of how the war has revealed another thing—the tremendous investing reserve of the population. The latter point is illustrated by the fact that the English have raised since the beginning of the war by loans of various kinds in the United Kingdom alone a total of $9,265,000,000.

The war's cost to Britain during the current year alone is reckoned at almost as large a sum as that total, or at $8,000,000,000. The problem of grasping the significance of so vast a sum is, of course, almost impossible for the average man. A faint idea of its meaning, however, may be gained by comparing it with the fact that the total value of the exports of the United States last year was $3,500,000,000, perhaps the largest in the nation's history.

The manner in which the national war savings committee has organized and is conducting the task of saving is in keeping with the tradition of British thoroughness. It is a revelation. The committee, under the chairmanship of the Right Hon. G. N. Barnes, a well known labor member of parliament, includes active business men and economists and financial exports of recognized ability.

One of the supreme tasks of the committee has been to see that the country strikes the golden mean in the matter of paying for the war out of her $75,000,000,000 of accumulated wealth, through selling back securities representing investments in neutral countries ,and by tapping the income of the people.

Five hundred local central committees, branches of the larger organization, have been organized throughout the country and are working with the sympathetic support of the local authorities. The latter include schools and colleges, churches and religious associations of all kinds, trade unions, men's brotherhoods, women's societies and federations, friendly societies, cooperative societies and similar bodies.

It is the influence and practical assistance of all of these organizations throughout the United Kingdom that has managed to roll up so many millions sterling toward paying for the conflict.

Something of the tremendous task in saving confronting the United Kingdom was indicated to the Associated Press by a financial expert of recognized ability.

"By his budget for the current fiscal year, from the end of March last to the first of next April, the chancellor of the exchequer arranged to raise by taxation 500 millions sterling," he said. "According to the requirements of the war that left thirteen hundred millions to be found in some other way. That other way is saving. We can best attain our end in this way by refraining from buying things which we can safely do without, thus liberating labor, machinery and capital and rendering it available for the purposes of the government in prosecuting the war.

"We reckon that the flower of our industrial manhood having gone into the army and navy, all those that are left behind are likewise needed for the purpose of winning the war. Our feeling is that we have no right to ask them to work for us in the production of things with which we can easily do without. So that by systematic saving in this respect we shall be increasing our export trade, by means of which we obtain the sinews of war at this time.

"It has been truly said that every shilling spent unnecessarily on ourselves is given to Germany, and every shilling saved strengthens the cause for which we are fighting. Because everything from abroad used here aids in increasing our debt to foreign nations and thus impairing our financial position, we are making a particular effort to save on articles from abroad. We firmly believe that by systematic saving we can shorten the war.

"The incentive of the people as a whole to save is also explained by the tremendous figures of the national revenue and expenditures. The national revenue for the year ending March 31, 1916, was $1,683,825,000. This sum was $550,365,000 more than the revenue for 1914-15, and by far the largest sum ever paid into the treasury in any single year in the nation's history, the increase being due to the new sources of taxation discovered by Reginald McKenna, chancellor of the exchequer. But the expenditure chargeable against this revenue was $7,795,790,000, a sum which is nearly $5,000,000 in excess of the expenditure over income in the year 1914-15. There will be a similar excess of expenditure over income in the current year; the demands being made on the treasury are, in fact, greater than they have ever been."

The government's very latest expedient for raising revenue is the war expenditure certificate, issued June 3 under a special act by the lords commissioners of the treasury, in amounts of 1,000, 5,000 and 10,000 pounds—roughly $5,000, $25,000 and $50,000, respectively.

These certificates run for two years from the date of issue at the price, for the time being, of 90 per cent. They are in effect treasury bills, so that the price represents a discount rate of 5 per cent per annum. The investment return on the capital invested is correspondingly higher, being a trifle over 5½ per cent per annum reckoned at simple interest added at the end of two years.

At the present moment, just after the first of the new certificates have been issued, it looks as though they might be a competitor of the successful twelve months' treasury bill, and also of the new exchequer bonds.

No better illustration of the genuine concern of every portion of the population to aid in the movement for national economy is to be found than the plan, recently formulated, of asking for subscriptions to enable each child in the London county council schools and the Church of England schools to start a savings bank account with a shilling. So successful has the movement been that officials of the government have given the subject in several instances individual attention. Sheriff Fleming's Record Is His Highest Recommendation

SHERIFF S. S. FLEMING.

The record made by Sheriff Fleming is before the people who elected him. No mistake was made in the election, in the opinion of the hundreds of friends of Sheriff Fleming, because he has made a good sheriff in every sense of the word. There is certainly no higher proof of a man's worthiness than the unbroken line of commendation coming from the public whom he serves. The white light of criticism ever burns steadily, and if there is cause for condemnation for public or private act or deed or word the man who becomes sheriff of a populous county like McLennan is sure to hear of it. Sam Fleming has escaped all just censure. In fact there is none. He has handled the business and the details of the office with intelligence and broadness and humanely. He has gained an experience that is invaluable and it has made of him a very valuable sheriff. He and his deputies are unhesitatingly in emergencies and with the courage that graces the actions of such men in such positions of trust they have as a man ever done their duty.

The personal characteristics of Sheriff Sam Fleming and his men are such that they are every one respected and highly esteemed. Neither by deed nor word have they ever done a thing to detract one iota from any one's character or standing. They have had to look on the dark side of the characters of many men and women and have universally striven to see the streak of good that might exist and through their advice cause if possible the great light of sound reason to shine forth that a brighter future might be in waiting for those who have erred.

Make full investigation, if you please, into the record of Sheriff Fleming and his men, and it is simple justice to say that there can be no unfavorable criticism of their official or personal conduct.

It has been truly said that some men have natural ability of a high order for the work in hand, and in making final choice of their vocations seem to be directed by a guiding influence that places them where their talents are the most useful. Sheriff Fleming and his entire force are living, breathing examples of this truism. Sheriff Fleming and Deputies Lee Jenkins, John Morgan, Fred Oliver, Joe Roberts, Ed Costley—what a coterie of men of that natural talent that makes for the efficient and proper handling of matters in connection with the sheriff's office.

Sheriff Fleming as the chief peace officer of the county has ever shared with his men the glories of many notable achievements in bringing fugitives to justice. Sheriff Fleming has been good to his men in every way. Sheriff Fleming has fully shared with them the proper proportionate part of the earnings, in that these men are receiving better salaries in their respective positions than ever paid before, and Sheriff Fleming has set a record for justness and consideration which of itself has endeared him to the populace, aside from his many other gracious and courteous acts, great kindliness and unstinted progressiveness in every way.

Sheriff Fleming's candidacy in the opinion of his closest friends and advisers are in the ascendancy and his prospects for a return to office by a tremendous majority grows brighter and brighter day by day as his many good deeds come to light through his friends who know of them.

Few people know of the many demands made upon the sheriff. These have been met with judgment and care by Sheriff Fleming. Few men in proportion to the number of voters realize the many friendly acts that have been done by Sheriff Fleming unheralded, and as these characteristic noble deeds of the man come to light closer and closer are the masses drawn to him. Sheriff Fleming has yet to turn the back of his hand to any one, be he the lowest culprit, for he deals humanely with all men, yet firmly, and those are his instructions, and prisoners who have gone out from the McLennan county jail are in many instances loudest in acknowledging various little acts of charity and courtesy extended that have set aflame the spark of true humanity and brought home to them the nobler impulses of life. Is it small wonder then that such a man, popular with the people, efficient to the highest degree, able in every respect, systematic and methodical and having installed the very best system of accounting and handling of all papers, processes, etc., who is humane from his soul and progressive in every sense of the word should have countless hundreds of men who are willing and anxious that he be returned to the office to make for the people a thorough representative peace officer and sheriff.

TEXAS TELEPHONE CO. HAS ECONOMICAL CAFE

Wholesome Dinner Costs Ten Cents and Sumptuous Lunch Comes for Thirteen Cents.

A new cafe has opened in Waco, a cafe that does not advertise, that makes no bid for "new business" and that confines its patronage strictly to a privileged number. The cafe is on the third floor of the new Texas Telephone building and is for the operators and young women employes. Even the most economical could hardly complain at the prices, for a meal can be bought for a dime, although if a customer desires to "splurge" a little it might run as high as 13c, and there are cases where one has been known to spend as much as 17c on a single meal!

The telephone cafe serves more than 100 young women of the company a daily "plate dinner" that can be had from 11 a. m. until 2 p. m. with varied menus for different days of the weeks, at 10c a person. Short orders are also filled between 11 a. m. and 6 p. m. Besides the regular dinner, which consists of meat, vegetables, bread and butter, etc., there are served, as "extra," puddings, pies, ice cream and other desserts, running in price from 2c to 4c, the choice being of a wide range and changed, like the regular dinner, each day of the week.

The cafe is fitted up very handsomely, and is absolutely sanitary. The room is large, well lighted and ventilated, with cement floor and equipped with tables with composition top and comfortable chairs. A completely equipped kitchen is provided, even such little details as sanitary chutes for the disposition of refuse and scraps being a part of the equipment. The food is wholesome and well cooked. The 10c plate dinner, which is very popular with the young women, offers a variety during the week that should suit the most fastidious of tastes. Samples of the menus are as follows:

Roast beef. Gravy. Potatoes.
Cucumber salad.
Rolls and butter.

• • •

Fried fish. Creamed potatoes.
Beet salad.
Rolls and butter.

• • •

Meat pie. Sweet potatoes.
String beans.
Bread and butter.

These are the "regular dinners" that are furnished the young women employes of the telephone company for 10c. "Extras" may be had, when desired, such as sandwiches, pies, coffee, or milk, and puddings and other desserts. Pimento sandwiches, roast beef sandwiches and salmon sandwiches are 3c each; ham sandwiches and egg and olive sandwiches are 4c; pies are 3c and 4c a cut, depending upon the kind; puddings and desserts of other kinds are also 3c and 4c. One who cannot make a substantial noonday meal for from 10c to 14c in the telephone restaurant must be hungry indeed.

No cash is handled in the cafe. The young women who desire to patronize the restaurant are sold coupon books, each holding $2 of gummed stamps of the value of 1c, 3c and 5c. The patron writes out her order and affixes to it slips for the proper amount. The young lady is also given credit until the end of the month for her coupon book, should she not desire to pay cash for it when she purchases. It is not obligatory upon the female employes of the telephone company that they eat at the company's cafe; rather, the cafe is provided as a convenience for them, and such it has evidently proven, for it is patronized daily by practically all the young women in the company's employ. The men employes are not served at the cafe unless it is on some special occasion, and then only by permission of the matron in charge.

The telephone cafe is in charge of Mrs. Dora Scheibe, who was formerly matron at the Waco high school. Mrs. Scheibe also has supervision over the operators' rest rooms and the other quarters in the building for the convenience and comfort of the young women. She has had considerable experience in work of this kind; the meals served in the building are prepared under her personal supervision, and most of the food personally selected by her in the market. It is the aim of the company to serve only wholesome, nourishing food for an absolute minimum of cost. The company does not expect to make any direct profit from its restaurant—in fact, it expects that it will be run at some loss—but the officials believe that in the long run the business does profit by the service, just as they believe that the telephone company and, indirectly, the company's patrons, profit in the long run from all the many conveniences and comforts furnished for the welfare of the employes, making satisfied employes and bringing increased efficiency in many ways.

Builders Are Not Securing Permits Promptly Enough

Building Inspector S. P. Herbert states again that permits for buildings are not being taken out as they should be, and that frequently large residences and even business houses are put under construction and almost completed before the permits are taken out.

It is impossible for a building to "get by" without finally showing up on the building permit record, as the plumbing and lighting cannot be installed until a record is placed in these offices at the city hall, but it is claimed that it would add much to the systematic handling of matters in the office of the building inspector to have the permits filed when buildings are started.

The city commission is apt to take matter up and take some action soon unless there is a better compliance with the regulations which stipulate that permits must be taken out for all buildings erected. It is claimed that many contractors are not complying at all with the regulations, and the department is getting impatient about the matter.

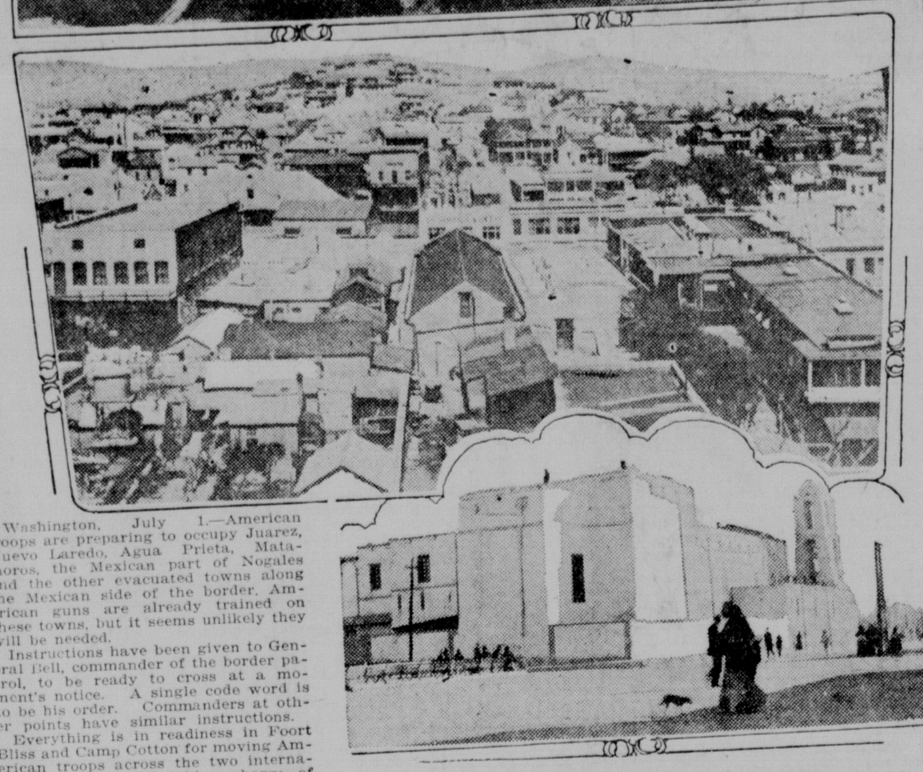
MEXICAN BORDER TOWNS WILL BE OCCUPIED BY AMERICAN TROOPS IMMEDIATELY FOLLOWING OUTBREAK OF HOSTILITIES



Washington, July 1.—American troops are preparing to occupy Juarez, Nuevo Laredo, Agua Prieta, Matamoros, the Mexican part of Nogales and the other evacuated towns along the Mexican side of the border. American guns are already trained on these towns, but it seems unlikely they will be needed.

Instructions have been given to General Bell, commander of the border patrol, to be ready to cross at a moment's notice. A single code word is to be his order. Commanders at other points have similar instructions.

Everything is in readiness in Foort Bliss and Camp Cotton for moving American troops across the two international bridges and taking charge of Juarez. For a week secret preparations have been going on at the fort and in the downtown camps.

Coincident with the occupation of Juarez, it is believed that the Mexican Central and the Mexican Northwestern railroad lines will be seized by the United States and will be used for any troop movements made necessary by the developments south of the line.

In the event that the town is occupied it will be placed under martial law, the United States will take charge of all public institutions, and, like Vera Cruz, it will be under nominal American control, although Mexican civil officials probably will be named and the local officials permitted to continue their duties if they desire.

Genial "Dad" Padgett Has Won Many Friends as Magistrate

Kindly, genial "Dad" Padgett, known far and wide by countless friends over this section, desires to again preside over the justice court where he is now magistrate and has been for three and a half years, extending justice to those brought before him, promptly carrying out the duties of th office and by his good nature and inspirational character caused memories to cluster about the court room that will never be forgotten.

Ruling according to the letter of the law and the spirit of a clear, conscientious and mature judgment on all questions arising during the trial of cases coming before him, Judge Padgett has made a record of which any one should feel proud.

For nearly half a century Justice Padgett has resided within the confines of McLennan, and he is known to thousands of the men, women and children thereof as a man of good judgment, keen foresight and a believer in the principles of equal rights to all and special privileges to none. He has therefore ruled wisely, equably and justly. Justice Padgett, in the opinion of his hundreds of friends, is in every way entitled to be returned and therefore on the 22nd day of July they look for a big majority in favor of "Dad," whose purse strings have ever been open to charity, whose heart is the heart of a man of mercy and whose soul radiates that nobleness of a good and upright character that has been an example to the younger generation for emulation. While Justice Padgett is necessarily occupied with the duties of the office constantly arising, yet he is finding time to visit among the voters and in event of missing any in his rounds he wants it distinctly understood that it was through no neglect. He states that while he believes he will be returned to the position now occupied that he wants every voter to personally know that he will appreciate their support and influence.—Political Advertisement.

Talk of First Bale Is Already in the Air

There is already talk in Waco of the "first bale of cotton" for the new season, and it sounds good when one thinks that another crop of the precious staple is about to come on the market and add to the resources of the people of this section and of the state.

Waco usually gets her first bale the very last days of July, occasionally passing into the first days of August before the first one arrives, but it is thought that this year the first bale will be a week or ten days later than usual, unless the weather turns off very hot and dry. Cotton is later than usual, but should no rain of consequence fall during this month it would come in earlier than with rain.

Most farmers are hoping that as soon as corn is safely disposed of with another good rain, that then there will be but little rain, as in this way the boll weevil situation can be best handled.

Sheriff Fleming's Record Is His Highest Recommendation

SHERIFF S. S. FLEMING.

The record made by Sheriff Fleming is before the people who elected him. No mistake was made in the election, in the opinion of the hundreds of friends of Sheriff Fleming, because he has made a good sheriff in every sense of the word. There is certainly no higher proof of a man's worthiness than the unbroken line of commendation coming from the public whom he serves. The white light of criticism ever burns steadily, and if there is cause for condemnation for public or private act or deed or word the man who becomes sheriff of a populous county like McLennan is sure to hear of it. Sam Fleming has escaped all just censure. In fact there is none. He has handled the business and the details of the office with intelligence and broadness and humanely. He has gained an experience that is invaluable and it has made of him a very valuable sheriff. He and his deputies are unhesitatingly in emergencies and with the courage that graces the actions of such men in such positions of trust they have as a man ever done their duty.

The personal characteristics of Sheriff Sam Fleming and his men are such that they are every one respected and highly esteemed. Neither by deed nor word have they ever done a thing to detract one iota from any one's character or standing. CLEEK OF SCOTLAND YARD

BY T. W. Hanshew

The Mystery of The Glass Tubes

(Copyright, 1914, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

MR. NARKOM entered his private office at Scotland Yard and dropped into his chair with a sigh of satisfaction. For the first time that week his report sheet was clear. Good! he had scotched that gang of smugglers at last.

The oncoming of footsteps outside caused him no qualms of doubt. This time he would be able to report a clean sheet; and at the opening and closing of the door behind him, he wheeled round with the dignity of a judge of the high court of chancery itself.

"Well, Petrie!" he said blandly to the detective sergeant who stood with bared head in front of him. "All right, this time, eh? I thought my little dodge would work—searching every vessel in the port, one at a time. Speak up, man. There isn't anything to report, is there?"

"Yes, sir. There's another case got through somehow," gave back Petrie with just the suspicion of a change in his imperturable countenance. "Mr. Kesteven has just wired through to the Yard with the news."

"Another case! Good heavens, man, it's impossible! Every boat and passenger has been searched—by my own men."

Detective Petrie gave a little dry cough, glanced nervously at the frowning face of his chief, then finally, taking his courage in both hands, spoke out.

"There's only one man as can get to the bottom of it, sir, and that's Mr. Cleek," said he nervously, shifting from one foot to the other. "'Tisn't many queer things has happened but what he hasn't solved them."

"Oh, I know that," flung out Narkom, frowning harder than ever. "You needn't remind me of what he's done. But the devil of it is, he's not in town—haven't seen or heard of him for more than a month. Meanwhile here's the blessed saccharine coming in as if it were wheat. I've half a mind to run down and see Miss Lorne, but Lord! what'd be the use? No one will ever find Hamilton Cleek, unless he's ready to come back."

At that particular moment the telephone bell jangled harshly, and Mr. Narkom spun round like a shot and seized hold of the receiver. The sound of some one whistling the opening bars of "God Save the King" came rippling to him over the wire.

"Gad! it's he himself. I * * * Oh, my dear chap, I never was so glad to hear you back in my life." He lowered his voice. "For heaven's sake, don't go away—hold the line one minute——" He turned to the waiting sergeant. "Clear out, Petrie; send Lennard along and——"

"You there? Dear old chap—that's all right. Just sent for Lennard. You can't think how glad I am to get you back—what's that? Urgent? I should think it is urgent. I say, can you contrive to meet me somewhere this morning? What? All right; I understand—it's a bit risky, but we'll do our best. Villiers street, in half an hour, eh? All right. Goodbye."

And that was how it came to pass that half an hour later Mr. Maverick Narkom, restored to his old debonnaire self, after a brief interlude with Lennard sallied forth from Scotland Yard where, drawn up to the curb, the very latest thing in limousines awaited him, and dropped into it with something akin to a smile lighting up his round podgy features.

A little crowd of boys had collected idly round the entrance to the Yard, talking and laughing among themselves, and in the midst of the crowd, ragged and dirty, was a little Parisian gamin, his sallow face alight with curiosity.

"Charing Cross station, Lennard, as fast as you can streak it. Must catch the 11 o'clock boat train," shouted Mr. Narkom as he jumped into the limousine and swung the door to behind him. "And keep a sharp lookout for Mr. Cleek at Villiers street; he'll be disguised as an old street road sweeper."

"Very well, sir," said Lennard. Then as he noticed the time on his clock dial before him, he gave a low whistle.

"Crikey! only three minutes!" he said, as he wrenched the car round and let her go full tilt.

Yet he was not so quick as the little French urchin, who was scudding along the Embankment as if the arms of the law were already after him.

Fate was evidently against Lennard that morning, in the shape of another car, obviously of foreign make and driven by a French chauffeur, who seemed bent on getting in his way, and he wasted much good English breath telling the driver what he thought of his methods and manners.

But it was just under the arch approaching Villiers street, however, that the accident happened.

The rival cars were very close to one another, and Lennard, glancing up at the little army of road sweepers busily engaged in their labors, was just in time to see one of their number put down his broom, run out into the open roadway directly in front of the fast-moving wheels, and then, even as he shut down the brakes and tried to bring the machine to a standstill, the front wheel caught the figure of the running man, whipped him quickly off his feet, and sent him crashing down into the roadway!

He spoke as he fell, muttered something, gave a little writhing twist of the body—and was still, lying like a dead thing, even as Mr. Narkom, with a hurried exclamation of dismay, jumped from the limousine and went pelting toward him while a policeman on point duty receiving a sign from his chief, hurried off and waved back the fast approaching crowd.

But Lennard was already kneeling beside the still figure, with well-marked horror in his face.

"He's dead, sir," said he softly, rising to his feet. "Dead as a door-nail, poor devil!" Then, lifting up his leathern driving-apron, he threw it reverently over the body and bared his head.

Meanwhile, the other car had driven rapidly away, pounding off in the opposite direction at a mad rate that ate up the miles like a cat lapping cream, and at the sight of which the superintendent gave vent to a little sigh of relief.

"Leave it to me," said he loudly to the constable. "I'll take him to the hospital in the car. Poor fellow! So careless of Lennard, though it was hardly his fault. No need for the ambulance." And disdaining all assistance save Lennard's, he lifted the body, with the apron still covering its face, and deposited it gently in the limousine.

Yet, when the crowd had been left far behind and the blinds of the limousine drawn by Mr. Narkom's hand, a strange thing happened. For the "corpse" sat up suddenly, throwing off the leathern apron, and looked at the superintendent with a little laugh of triumph.

"Well played!" said he in Cleek's voice and with Cleek's own little trick of speech. "I had to make a sprint for it, though, and I shall be glad of a rest. Not that there's much chance of that while you're around. I only rang you up just to let you know I was still upon this planet, but—who's in trouble this time, dear friend, eh?"

"I am," said Mr. Narkom, simply, pulling a long face.

"Supposing you tell me the facts," interposed Cleek gently, lighting a cigarette from the case Mr. Narkom profferred him.

"It's a case of continual smuggling——"

Cleek erected his eyebrows.

"It's saccharine! That's the stuff—and it's coming in like water—no one knows from where, or how; only that not a cent of duty is being paid. Capt. Kesteven, in command of the customs House at Southampton, is perfectly enraged over the whole affair!"

It was getting late in the afternoon when they reached Southampton, but they drove straight down to the customs house, where Mr. Narkom sent in his official card, and together with Cleek waited in the little anteroom which evidently served as an office.

Two minutes later, the door was flung open, and an elderly gentleman fairly hurled himself upon the superintendent, clasping his hand as though it belonged to a long-lost brother. It was Capt. Kesteven, the head of the customs house. He was a fine, hale, gray-haired, gray-bearded man of about fifty-five or sixty; a man with something of the naval officer in his bearing.

Mr. Narkom coughed slightly and waved a hand toward Cleek, who stood just behind him.

"This is Mr. George Headland," said he, smiling a little at the captain's look of amazement. "He's taken the place of Cleek—Hamilton Cleek, you know. Suppose you tell us the facts, Capt. Kesteven. And then perhaps my colleague and myself can get to work."

"How long has it been going on?" asked Cleek quietly, tipping his head on one side and looking so altogether stupid that Capt. Kesteven eyed him in unveiled contempt.

"Nearly five weeks," he replied. "We have a special number of secret service men making observations, and they reported the cases to me. I have it down here in my official report book." He plunged over to his desk, returning to the table with a large leather-bound volume.

"Here you are, 'June 8th. Case of saccharine got through free—reported. Starchpelt.' Here you are again, 15th ditto, 19th ditto, 24th ditto . . ."

Cleek put up a detaining hand.

"Stop. One minute," said he blandly. "There couldn't be any mistake, I suppose? This Starchpelt, as you call him, is——"

"One of the finest men in the service!"

"Hum! Ah! quite so. And now, what about the boats?' What manner of craft are they, and where do they come from?"

"Havre, mostly. You see, just now vast quantities of French dairy produce, fruit and vegetables are being landed, and we had every one searched. They are grumbling bitterly——"

"At what?" struck in Cleek, with a sudden uplifting of the eyebrows. "They don't like being searched, do you mean?"

The captain shook his great head.

"No, it's the delay. Everything depends on their catching the boat trains to London, and all this searching takes time——"

"H'mmm! And what boats have you in harbor now? Let's have a look at them."

"The very thing I should suggest," said Capt. Kesteven eagerly, and jumping to his feet, he grabbed for his official cap. From the customs house it took but a few minutes to reach the harbor, which bore a curiously deserted look. Two or three great liners lay in the docks, while at anchor rode a few French boats, their decks still crowded with the empty packing cases in which their cargoes had been carried.

"Every one of these was unloaded under police supervision," said Capt. Kesteven.

Capt. Kesteven's eyes lit up.

"Ah! so Jean Bertillot has come back! That means my wife has returned from her holiday as well. She said she would sail with Jean. A splendid fellow. That's his boat, La Fleurette Noire, Mr. Headland, sailed and owned by the finest man that ever drew breath, and, by heaven! the most unhappy."

The snapping of steel against steel, the harsh music of the handcuffs.

Cleek switched round so suddenly as almost to startle the grim-faced captain, whose eyes had grown strangely soft.

"Unhappy?" he said. "Why should he be unhappy? Or perhaps you don't know?"

"It happens that I do, for I—or, rather, my wife—was the means of making him happy for a few months."

He drew out his cigarette case and offered it to Cleek and Mr. Narkom, and lighted up himself.

"It was this way," he continued, blowing out the match and tossing it into the swirl of green water below them. "He lost his young wife on their wedding trip, five years ago. He is a sort of protege of mine, and I have known him since a lad, when he came to and fro on his father's boat before him. My wife, some years ago, had a desire to have a maid from Brittany, and Jean Bertillot said he would procure her one from his native village some twenty miles from Havre. He brought us Rose-Marie, a girl as good as gold, industrious and honest to a fault, and we were delighted with her. Well, we did not have her long. Bertillot discovered that she was more necessary to him than to us, and married her forthwith, and we—my wife and I—attended the wedding in Brittany. You may imagine our dismay when La Fleurette Rouge, as the craft was then called, returned—without her."

"Hello!" said Cleek with a twitch of the eyebrows. "So he changed the name of his boat, eh?"

"Yes, said the captain. "I think he worshiped Rose, and after her death—it seems she ate something on board that upset her, was taken ill and died, and he buried her at sea—I tell you, it changed the man entirely. He is morose and embittered, but faithful—my word! I'd trust my life to Jean Bertillot. Well, when he got to harbor he spent all his profits on painting his boat black—everything is black, inside and out; cabins, decks, sails—as you can see for yourself—and a regular raven among doves. And he rechristened her La Fleurette Noire. Very few men, in fact, will work on her; they say it's so damnably gloomy. Well, it's his own boat, and he does what he likes. Ever since that day, however, he has plied to and fro, with his butter and eggs; he doesn't seem to care whether he sells them or not. He's just broken-hearted."

"I'd like to have a chat with him," said Cleek, shading his eyes from the sun and peering intently over the blue sunlit harbor where the sea lay like a shimmering jewel-set cloak of green velvet.

"So you shall, Mr. Headland," said the captain, nodding, with perhaps just a little tinge of irony in his voice. "Perhaps he'll be able to give you some ideas——"

"Perhaps he will," answered Cleek enigmatically.

He followed the captain down to the little quay where La Fleurette Noire had anchored, her black decks and rigging looking even more depressing when at close quarters than at a distance.

A little crowd of gesticulating, chattering Breton sailors were on the deck—amidst them just a patch of white; a woman's dress—and at the sight of its wearer Cleek gave a cry of ecstatic delight and rushed off at headlong speed, leaving Mr. Narkom to explain to a justly aggrieved customs officer that this was one of the latest methods in detecting on the part of his "smartest officer, by James!"

But Cleek cared nothing for customs or smugglers just then, for here, within a hundred yards, was Ailsa Lorne.

Now the waves took on a brighter blue, the sun shone more royally—but not more than Cleek's face, as he helped her along the coal-black gangway.

"A stroke of sheer luck, this—or am I dreaming?" he said softly, with a little laugh of pure rapture. "Ailsa, is it you, my dear, my dear!"

"It is, indeed," she made answer with a quick smile. "But surely you got my letter? It should have arrived today."

"For which Mr. Narkom is to be blamed!" said Cleek, with an inward frown for that gentleman.

She gave vent to a happy little laugh.

"Never mind!" said she softly, looking up into his face with shining eyes. "I am rather glad you did not. Somehow, the crossing on that boat has got on my nerves. My old Breton nurse, Jeannette, wrote to me that she was very ill, so I could not help but go to her; and, not wanting to wait for the other boat, I crossed on this one, with Mrs. Kesteven. But"—she gave a little shiver—"it's full of mystery."

Cleek's face twitched with sudden interest.

"Mystery? What do you mean by that, I wonder?"

They had crossed to the end of the quay, and Ailsa gave a little nervous look over her shoulder before she answered him. Then, seeing that they were out of all earshot:

"It is only just a fancy, I expect, on my part. The blackness of everything got on my nerves—but I fancied I heard all kinds of queer sounds—unexpected sounds—during the night. I slept on board last evening, so as to be sure and get the boat train; but it was so hot and stuffy in the cabin that I threw a cloak round me and went out on deck. It was then I saw ——" She broke off.

"Saw what?" said Cleek with a quick intaking of the breath.

She gave another nervous little giggle.

"It sounds so silly," she said apologetically, "but I saw a match strike itself on a box. I know you'll think I am mad, but I saw the yellow matchbox and the white match. I even heard the scratching sounds it makes when it ignites—yet there was no one there! I don't think I was ever so frightened in my life."

"But where did you see the matchbox?" asked Cleek, quietly watching her face with keen, searching eyes.

"Just inside the cabin, next to mine. Rose-Marie's cabin, they call it, and the crew swear that it is haunted. The deck lies just beside the cabins on these boats; in fact, the deck and the cabins are all on one floor, and there are big windows on either side of them to let in the light. It was through one of these I saw—Hush!" She stopped short as the superintendent, together with Capt. Kesteven and a tall, pale-looking woman with faded hair approached, and lifted a warning finger." Don't say a word. They are both so fond of Jean Bertillot. I've known Capt. Kesteven for years, you know, and I wouldn't hurt their feelings for worlds, just for my own foolish imagining."

Cleek nodded silently and, joining the others, the whole party drove to the captain's house, at the captain's own suggestion, for tea and a wash-up after their journey. There was time enough to see over the boats tomorrow morning; tonight he insisted that they must rest."

"Jean doesn't unload till the morning," said Mrs. Kesteven, as they drove away. "He told me he was in no hurry; so you can look over his cargo in the morning if you like."

When, half an hour later, Cleek and Mr. Narkom went upstairs to their bedroom and shut the door, Cleek's face was as keen as a terrier's and his eyes fairly snapped with excited interest.

"Going to be a corker this time, and no mistake," said Mr. Narkom dejectedly. "I stopped to speak to that chap Bertillot, while you were with Miss Lorne, and it's just what they say—he's a fine fellow—a—a ——" His voice trailed off into silence as he noted the curious look on Cleek's face.

"Cleek, old chap!" he cried, and the hard hammering of his heart made his voice quaver. "Good lord! man, don't say you've got a clue already!"

"It's only just a faint idea, old chap—mayn't lead anywhere. Go downstairs, like a friend, and entertain these people for me. Do anything, say anything, but just let me alone!"

And Mr. Narkom, suppressing his curiosity with a slightly disappointed air, promptly went out of the room and left Cleek to his own resources.

It was barely 6 o'clock on the following morning, when Cleek and Mr. Narkom found themselves once more on the quay, looking out for Capt. Kesteven.

"Early birds," said that gentleman as soon as he caught sight of them. "Going to take a turn at helping Jean unload, eh?"

"Yes, that's it," said Cleek serenely. "I'd like to have a look at his boat. You never can tell——"

"Preposterous nonsense!" The captain shrugged his shoulders scornfully. "You're barking up the wrong tree, I can tell you. Still, come along. Boat ahoy!" he shouted, and in a minute or so a sleepy figure came tumbling up on deck. "Jean, mon gars, we're coming on board."

The man was tall and dark, with heavy-lidded eyes and soot-black hair. There was an olive hue to his skin, but his fine eyes were gray and wrinkled at the corners, and his mouth had a pathetic droop. He stared at the newcomers with simple unconsciousness.

"A couple of officers from London, Jean, who have come to look into the matter of smuggling," was the way the captain introduced the subject. "Just a matter of form. You don't mind them seeing over La Fleurette, do you?"

"Mais non, m'sieu', of a certainty not," said Jean smoothly, with a wonderful courtesy. "It is of a business but all mysterious."

He led the way over the boat without further ado.

"That's so," agreed George Headland, his heavy face even stupider than before." A fine boat, this, skipper." They had reached what was evidently Bertillot's own cabin. "And I don't mind telling you, now I've seen it, that all my ideas have gone to smash, so to speak. I'd a notion there might be a place in here, where one of the men might have pushed in a box, don't you know."

"Well, of all the blithering nonsense!" broke out Capt. Kesteven impulsively, while Bertillot looked from one to the other, as if only half comprehending the drift of Mr. Headland's remarks.

"A box—in 'ere!" he echoed. "But non, m'sieu', zere is no box. Zis is my cabin—my own—no one sets ze foot in 'ere but myself."

"Quite right, skipper. I see now I am wrong. No room to hide a cat in here." Cleek swung round slowly on his heel, then as his hat slipped from his fingers to the floor, stooped slowly to pick it up.

"Bit of a facer for me, eh, what?" he said dejectedly. Then, as he caught sight of an oil stove standing on an empty packing case, he smacked his lips. "Have a morning cup of tea and an egg, eh? 'Pon me soul, I could do with a cup myself."

Jean Bertillot looked him up and down in withering contempt. "M'sieu' is pleased to joke. I not 'ave time for morning tea."

"Like a little something stronger, eh?" Cleek chuckled inanely; then lurched over, accidentally striking a case of eggs, packed by the egg factor at Havre.

Jean Bertillot uttered a hurried exclamation, and Cleek blundered away again, apologizing profusely.

"I'm like a bull in a china shop," he muttered under his breath, as he mopped his forehead with his handkerchief. Then, suddenly he went off on another tack. "Tell you what—it's so precious dark in here, and stuffy—faugh! Let's have that porthole opened." He lurched over, this time catching his foot in the black-dyed matting which covered the floor and, under the circumstances, it was only natural that he should lose his balance. With a hasty exclamation of dismay, he clutched hold of the nearest crate of eggs, righting himself from what would have been a foolish—and hasty—fall, and sent the crate clattering to the floor with a heavy crash that made everything in the cabin clatter and jangle together.

Bertillot's face grew red with anger as the lid burst open, and the top layer of eggs tumbled out pellmell over the floor. Considering the force of the fall, it was surprising that more eggs had not broken, and Cleek, fairly covered with confusion at the blunder he had made, tried to make restitution by saving as many as possible, to a running accompaniment of oaths and maledictions from Bertillot, who, when there were only the broken yolks to be seen, darted from the cabin, returning in a second with a cloth of a brilliant yellow color, with which he wiped up the stains. Still apologetic, Cleek raised himself up.

"I think, m'sieur, a cigarette would not be unacceptable." He stopped short, as a faint clicking sound came through the closed door; but only for a second; then he fumbled clumsily in his pocket, pulling out his cigarette case and holding it toward Bertillot.

The Breton scowled, but his love of good tobacco triumphed, and he put out a brawny hand. Like a flash Cleek's hand closed on it, and Narkom leaped forward. Came a struggle—short, sharp, infinitely fierce—then: the snapping of steel against steel, the harsh music of the handcuffs, and Bertillot stood a prisoner, while Capt. Kesteven, too dazed by the sudden turn of events, gazed helplessly at the three of them.

"Good heavens!" he cried out at last. "Are you mad! Mr. Narkom, I appeal to you! This is rankest idiocy! What has Jean done?"

Cleek whipped round upon him, breathing hard, a something bright, triumphant, gleaming in his eyes.

"He has smuggled his last tube of saccharine into the country, my friend—that's what he's done!" he said, with a little theatrical gesture that sat oddly upon the personality of George Headland.

"Impossible!" Capt. Kesteven's face still showed utter disdain of the matter. "How has he done it, man? How could he?"

"By a very simple but effective plan. I rather think you will find the tubes in those hard-boiled eggs, over there, and I shouldn't be surprised if the pats of butter had not got their little loads also."

He stepped over to the big crate and lifted an egg from it, tapping the shell upon the window sill, while Bertillot, a writhing, cursing, furious Thing, watched him with absolute hatred in his eyes. The shell broke, and he severed the egg with his fingers. In the center of the crumbling, yellow yolk lay a tiny glass tube, an inch or so long, filled with what appeared to be white powder.

For a moment there was a silence—tense, terrible, fraught with the bitter disappointment of a broken faith, the bitter triumph of a task fulfilled.

Then:

"Bertillot—Jean—Jean! And I would have trusted you with my life!" broke forth the captain in a dull, hurt voice, as the man stood looking sullenly at him.

But Cleek laid a gentle hand upon the captain's shoulder.

"You wouldn't if you knew he was cousin to Gaston Merode, the worst Apache in Paris," said he quietly. "I've a good memory for faces, mon ami, and I haven't lived in the old 'Twisted Arm' days for nothing. Margot's slave! Margot's pet! Margot's pretty tool for the execution of her vile work! A dollar to a ducat she's at the bottom of this!"

The man made no response; merely stood there in a sullen silence, and Cleek switched round upon his heel and laid a hand upon the superintendent's arm.

"How did I guess?" he said, in answer to Mr. Narkom's excited query. "Firstly, I wasn't so impressed with that mourning idea as the rest of you, and when any one sees a match strike itself on a box, by invisible hands, I felt sure that some trickery was being done. And that's the explanation of the Vanishing Lady trick, as our friend Mr. Devant makes it. A clever trick, too, by Jupiter! Clever as sin. Simply black against black. Put a man in black suit, mask and gloves, in the center of equally black surroundings, and I'll swear you won't any of you see him. Bertillot could pass from one cabin to the other unnoticed. I confess I was a bit puzzled about his method of smuggling in the stuff, until I saw that egg timer over there."

He pointed to the somewhat old-fashioned contrivance standing on a little shelf just above the oil stove, and Narkom sighed in a sort of dumb admiration.

"That settled it. Then, again, a fall like that which the crate received ought to have smashed every egg in the place, and when I picked them up and helped the good work a little bit further with my fingers, I knew I was right. I had suspected something when I picked up the chip of egg-shell just by the table, and the yellow cloth settled the matter. Why the yellow cloth, my friend? Because it would show no yellow stains, after wiping away the yolk, when the tubes were pressed into the egg. A clever trick, Monsieur Jean Bertillot, a very clever trick."

MR. NARKOM entered his private office at Scotland Yard and dropped into his chair with a sigh of satisfaction. For the first time that week his report sheet was clear. Good! he had scotched that gang of smugglers at last.

The oncoming of footsteps outside caused him no qualms of doubt. This time he would be able to report a clean sheet; and at the opening and closing of the door behind him, he wheeled round with the dignity of a judge of the high court of chancery itself.

"Well, Petrie!" he said blandly to the detective sergeant who stood with bared head in front of him. "All right, this time, eh? I thought my little dodge would work—searching every vessel in the port, one at a time. Speak up, man. There isn't anything to report, is there?"

"Yes, sir. There's another case got through somehow," gave back Petrie with just the suspicion of a change in his imperturable countenance. "Mr. Kesteven has just wired through to the Yard with the news."

"Another case! Good heavens, man, it's impossible! Every boat and passenger has been searched—by my own men."

Detective Petrie gave a little dry cough, glanced nervously at the frowning face of his chief, then finally, taking his courage in both hands, spoke out.

"There's only one man as can get to the bottom of it, sir, and that's Mr. Cleek," said he nervously, shifting from one foot to the other. "'Tisn't many queer things has happened but what he hasn't solved them."

"Oh, I know that," flung out Narkom, frowning harder than ever. "You needn't remind me of what he's done. But the devil of it is, he's not in town—haven't seen or heard of him for more than a month. Meanwhile here's the blessed saccharine coming in as if it were wheat. I've half a mind to run down and see Miss Lorne, but Lord! what'd be the use? No one will ever find Hamilton Cleek, unless he's ready to come back."

At that particular moment the telephone bell jangled harshly, and Mr. Narkom spun round like a shot and seized hold of the receiver. The sound of some one whistling the opening bars of "God Save the King" came rippling to him over the wire.

"Gad! it's he himself. I * * * Oh, my dear chap, I never was so glad to hear you back in my life." He lowered his voice. "For heaven's sake, don't go away—hold the line one minute——" He turned to the waiting sergeant. "Clear out, Petrie; send Lennard along and——"

"You there? Dear old chap—that's all right. Just sent for Lennard. You can't think how glad I am to get you back—what's that? Urgent? I should think it is urgent. I say, can you contrive to meet me somewhere this morning? What? All right; I understand—it's a bit risky, but we'll do our best. Villiers street, in half an hour, eh? All right. Goodbye."

And that was how it came to pass that half an hour later Mr. Maverick Narkom, restored to his old debonnaire self, after a brief interlude with Lennard sallied forth from Scotland Yard where, drawn up to the curb, the very latest thing in limousines awaited him, and dropped into it with something akin to a smile lighting up his round podgy features.

A little crowd of boys had collected idly round the entrance to the Yard, talking and laughing among themselves, and in the midst of the crowd, ragged and dirty, was a little Parisian gamin, his sallow face alight with curiosity.

"Charing Cross station, Lennard, as fast as you can streak it. Must catch the 11 o'clock boat train," shouted Mr. Narkom as he jumped into the limousine and swung the door to behind him. "And keep a sharp lookout for Mr. Cleek at Villiers street; he'll be disguised as an old street road sweeper."

"Very well, sir," said Lennard. Then as he noticed the time on his clock dial before him, he gave a low whistle.

"Crikey! only three minutes!" he said, as he wrenched the car round and let her go full tilt.

Yet he was not so quick as the little French urchin, who was scudding along the Embankment as if the arms of the law were already after him.

Fate was evidently against Lennard that morning, in the shape of another car, obviously of foreign make and driven by a French chauffeur, who seemed bent on getting in his way, and he wasted much good English breath telling the driver what he thought of his methods and manners.

But it was just under the arch approaching Villiers street, however, that the accident happened.

The rival cars were very close to one another, and Lennard, glancing up at the little army of road sweepers busily engaged in their labors, was just in time to see one of their number put down his broom, run out into the open roadway directly in front of the fast-moving wheels, and then, even as he shut down the brakes and tried to bring the machine to a standstill, the front wheel caught the figure of the running man, whipped him quickly off his feet, and sent him crashing down into the roadway!

He spoke as he fell, muttered something, gave a little writhing twist of the body—and was still, lying like a dead thing, even as Mr. Narkom, with a hurried exclamation of dismay, jumped from the limousine and went pelting toward him while a policeman on point duty receiving a sign from his chief, hurried off and waved back the fast approaching crowd.

But Lennard was already kneeling beside the still figure, with well-marked horror in his face.

"He's dead, sir," said he softly, rising to his feet. "Dead as a door-nail, poor devil!" Then, lifting up his leathern driving-apron, he threw it reverently ove. the body and bared his head.

Meanwhile, the other car had driven rapidly away, pounding off in the opposite direction at a mad rate that ate up the miles like a cat lapping cream, and at the sight of which the superintendent gave vent to a little sigh of relief.

"Leave it to me," said he loudly to the constable. "I'll take him to the hospital in the car. Poor fellow! So careless of Lennard, though it was hardly his fault. No need for the ambulance." And disdaining all arsistance save Lennard's, he lifted the body, with the apron still covering its face, and deposited it gently in the limousine.

Yet, when the crowd had been left far behind and the blinds of the limousine drawn by Mr. Narkom's hand, a strange thing happened. For the "corpse" sat up suddenly, throwing off the leathern apron, and looked at the superintendent with a little laugh of triumph.

"Well played!" said he in Cleek's voice and with Cleek's own little trick of speech. "I had to make a sprint for it, though, and I shall be glad of a rest. Not that there's much chance of that while you're around. I only rang you up just to let you know I was still upon this planet, but—who's in trouble this time, dear friend, eh?"

"I am," said Mr. Narkom, simply, pulling a long face.

"Supposing you tell me the facts," interposed Cleek gently, lighting a cigarette from the case Mr. Narkom profferred him.

"It's a case of continual smuggling——"

Cleek erected his eyebrows.

"It's saccharine! That's the stuff—and it's coming in like water—no one knows from where, or how; only that not a cent of duty is being paid. Capt. Kesteven, in command of the customs House at Southampton, is perfectly enraged over the whole affair!"

It was getting late in the afternoon when they reached Southampton, but they drove straight down to the customs house, where Mr. Narkom sent in his official card, and together with Cleek waited in the little anteroom which evidently served as an office.

Two minutes later, the door was flung open, and an elderly gentleman fairly hurled himself upon the superintendent, clasping his hand as though it belonged to a long-lost brother. It was Capt. Kesteven, the head of the customs house. He was a fine, hale, gray-haired, gray-bearded man of about fifty-five or sixty; a man with something of the naval officer in his bearing.

Mr. Narkom coughed slightly and waved a hand toward Cleek, who stood just behind him.

"This is Mr. George Headland," said he, smiling a little at the captain's look of amazement. "He's taken the place of Cleek—Hamilton Cleek, you know. Suppose you tell us the facts, Capt. Kesteven. And then perhaps my colleague and myself can get to work."

"How long has it been going on?" asked Cleek quietly, tipping his head on one side and looking so altogether stupid that Capt. Kesteven eyed him in unveiled contempt.

"Nearly five weeks," he replied. "We have a special number of secret service men making observations, and they reported the cases to me. I have it down here in my official report book." He plunged over to his desk, returning to the table with a large leather-bound volume.

"Here you are, 'June 8th. Case of saccharine got through free—reported. Starchpelt.' Here you are again, 15th ditto, 19th ditto, 24th ditto . . ."

Cleek put up a detaining hand.

"Stop. One minute," said he blandly. "There couldn't be any mistake, I suppose? This Starchpelt, as you call him, is——"

"One of the finest men in the service!"

"Hum! Ah! quite so. And now, what about the boats?' What manner of craft are they, and where do they come from?"

"Havre, mostly. You see, just now vast quantities of French dairy produce, fruit and vegetables are being landed, and we had every one searched. They are grumbling bitterly——"

"At what?" struck in Cleek, with a sudden uplifting of the eyebrows. "They don't like being searched, do you mean?"

The captain shook his great head.

"No, it's the delay. Everything depends on their catching the boat trains to London, and all this searching takes time——"

"H'mmm! And what boats have you in harbor now? Let's have a look at them.

"The very thing I should suggest," said Capt. Kesteven eagerly, and jumping to his feet, he grabbed for his official cap. From the customs house it took but a few minutes to reach the harbor, which bore a curiously deserted look. Two or three great liners lay in the docks, while at anchor rode a few French boats, their decks still crowded with the empty packing cases in which their cargoes had been carried.

"Every one of these was unloaded under police supervision," said Capt. Kesteven.

"Hello!" interrupted Cleek abruptly, as his eyes swept over the various boats. "That's a peculiar-looking object—that black one at the end."

Capt. Kesteven's eyes lit up.

"Ah! so Jean Bertillot has come back! That means my wife has returned from her holiday as well. She said she would sail with Jean. A splendid fellow. That's his boat, La Fleurette Noire, Mr. Headland, sailed and owned by the finest man that ever drew breath, and, by heaven! the most unhappy."

The snapping of steel against steel, the harsh music of the handcuffs.

Cleek switched round so suddenly as almost to startle the grim-faced captain, whose eyes had grown strangely soft.

"Unhappy?" he said. "Why should he be unhappy? Or perhaps you don't know?"

"It happens that I do, for I—or, rather, my wife—was the means of making him happy for a few months."

He drew out his cigarette case and offered it to Cleek and Mr. Narkom, and lighted up himself.

"It was this way," he continued, blowing out the match and tossing it into the swirl of green water below them. "He lost his young wife on their wedding trip, five years ago. He is a sort of protege of mine, and I have known him since a lad, when he came to and fro on his father's boat before him. My wife, some years ago, had a desire to have a maid from Brittany, and Jean Bertillot said he would procure her one from his native village some twenty miles from Havre. He brought us Rose-Marie, a girl as good as gold, industrious and honest to a fault, and we were delighted with her. Well, we did not have her long. Bertillot discovered that she was more necessary to him than to us, and married her forthwith, and we—my wife and I—attended the wedding in Brittany. You may imagine our dismay when La Fleurette Rouge, as the craft was then called, returned—without her."

"Hello!" said Cleek with a twitch of the eyebrows. "So he changed the name of his boat, eh?"

"Yes, said the captain. "I think he worshiped Rose, and after her death—it seems she ate something on board that upset her, was taken ill and died, and he buried her at sea—I tell you, it changed the man entirely. He is morose and embittered, but faithful—my word! I'd trust my life to Jean Bertillot. Well, when he got to harbor he spent all his profits on painting his boat black—everything is black, inside and out; cabins, decks, sails—as you can see for yourself—and a regular raven among doves. And he rechristened her La Fleurette Noire. Very few men, in fact, will work on her; they say it's so damnably gloomy. Well, it's his own boat, and he does what he likes. Ever since that day, however, he has plied to and fro, with his butter and eggs; he doesn't seem to care whether he sells them or not. He's just broken-hearted."

"I'd like to have a chat with him," said Cleek, shading his eyes from the sun and peering intently over the blue sunlit harbor where the sea lay like a shimmering jewel-set cloak of green velvet.

"So you shall, Mr. Headland," said the captain, nodding, with perhaps just a little tinge of irony in his voice. "Perhaps he'll be able to give you some ideas——"

"Perhaps he will," answered Cleek enigmatically.

He followed the captain down to the little quay where La Fleurette Noire had anchored, her black decks and rigging looking even more depressing when at close quarters than at a distance.

A little crowd of gesticulating, chattering Breton sailors were on the deck—amidst them just a patch of white; a woman's dress—and at the sight of its wearer Cleek gave a cry of ecstatic delight and rushed off at headlong speed, leaving Mr. Narkom to explain to a justly aggrieved customs officer that this was one of the latest methods in detecting on the part of his "smartest officer, by James!"

But Cleek cared nothing for customs or smugglers just then, for here, within a hundred yards, was Ailsa Lorne.

Now the waves took on a brighter blue, the sun shone more royally—but not more than Cleek's face, as he helped her along the coal-black gangway.

"A stroke of sheer luck, this—or am I dreaming?" he said softly, with a little laugh of pure rapture. "Ailsa, is it you, my dear, my dear!"

"It is, indeed," she made answer with a quick smile. "But surely you got my letter? It should have arrived today."

"For which Mr. Narkom is to be blamed!" said Cleek, with an inward frown for that gentleman.

She gave vent to a happy little laugh.

"Never mind!" said she softly, looking up into his face with shining eyes. "I am rather glad you did not. Somehow, the crossing on that boat has got on my nerves. My old Breton nurse, Jeannette, wrote to me that she was very ill, so I could not help but go to her; and, not wanting to wait for the other boat, I crossed on this one, with Mrs. Kesteven. But"—she gave a little shiver—"it's full of mystery."

Cleek's face twitched with sudden interest.

"Mystery? What do you mean by that, I wonder?"

They had crossed to the end of the quay, and Ailsa gave a little nervous look over her shoulder before she answered him. Then, seeing that they were out of all earshot:

"It is only just a fancy, I expect, on my part. The blackness of everything got on my nerves—but I fancied I heard all kinds of queer sounds—unexpected sounds—during the night. I slept on board last evening, so as to be sure and get the boat train; but it was so hot and stuffy in the cabin that I threw a cloak round me and went out on deck. It was then I saw ——" She broke off.

"Saw what?" said Cleek with a quick intaking of the breath.

She gave another nervous little giggle.

"It sounds so silly," she said apologetically, "but I saw a match strike itself on a box. I know you'll think I am mad, but I saw the yellow matchbox and the white match. I even heard the scratching sounds it makes when it ignites—yet there was no one there! I don't think I was ever so frightened in my life."

"But where did you see the matchbox?" asked Cleek, quietly watching her face with keen, searching eyes.

"Just inside the cabin, next to mine. Rose-Marie's cabin, they call it, and the crew swear that it is haunted. The deck lies just beside the cabins on these boats; in fact, the deck and the cabins are all on one floor, and there are big windows on either side of them to let in the light. It was through one of these I saw—Hush!" She stopped short as the superintendent, together with Capt. Kesteven and a tall, pale-looking woman with faded hair approached, and lifted a warning finger." Don't say a word. They are both so fond of Jean Bertillot. I've known Capt. Kesteven for years, you know, and I wouldn't hurt their feelings for worlds, just for my own foolish imagining."

Cleek nodded silently and, joining the others, the whole party drove to the captain's house, at the captain's own suggestion, for tea and a wash-up after their journey. There was time enough to see over the boats tomorrow morning; tonight he insisted that they must rest."

"Jean doesn't unload till the morning," said Mrs. Kesteven, as they drove away. "He told me he was in no hurry; so you can look over his cargo in the morning if you like."

When, half an hour later, Cleek and Mr. Narkom went upstairs to their bedroom and shut the door, Cleek's face was as keen as a terrier's and his eyes fairly snapped with excited interest.

"Going to be a corker this time, and no mistake," said Mr. Narkom dejectedly. "I stopped to speak to that chap Bertillot, while you were with Miss Lorne, and it's just what they say—he's a fine fellow—a—a ——" His voice trailed off into silence as he noted the curious look on Cleek's face.

"Cleek, old chap!" he cried, and the hard hammering of his heart made his voice quaver. "Good lord! man, don't say you've got a clue already!"

"It's only just a faint idea, old chap—mayn't lead anywhere. Go downstairs, like a friend, and entertain these people for me. Do anything, say anything, but just let me alone!"

And Mr. Narkom, suppressing his curiosity with a slightly disappointed air, promptly went out of the room and left Cleek to his own resources.

It was barely 6 o'clock on the following morning, when Cleek and Mr. Narkom found themselves once more on the quay, looking out for Capt. Kesteven.

"Early birds," said that gentleman as soon as he caught sight of them. "Going to take a turn at helping Jean unload, eh?"

"Yes, that's it," said Cleek serenely. "I'd like to have a look at his boat. You never can tell——"

"Preposterous nonsense!" The captain shrugged his shoulders scornfully. "You're barking up the wrong tree, I can tell you. Still, come along. Boat ahoy!" he shouted, and in a minute or so a sleepy figure came tumbling up on deck. "Jean, mon gars, we're coming on board."

The man was tall and dark, with heavy-lidded eyes and soot-black hair. There was an olive hue to his skin, but his fine eyes were gray and wrinkled at the corners, and his mouth had a pathetic droop. He stared at the newcomers with simple unconsciousness.

"A couple of officers from London, Jean, who have come to look into the matter of smuggling," was the way the captain introduced the subject. "Just a matter of form. You don't mind them seeing over La Fleurette, do you?"

"Mais non, m'sieu', of a certainty not," said Jean smoothly, with a wonderful courtesy. "It is of a business but all mysterious."

He led the way over the boat without further ado.

"That', so," agreed George Headland, his heavy face even stupider than before." A fine boat, this, skipper." They had reached what was evidently Bertillot's own cabin. "And I don't mind telling you, now I've seen it, that all my ideas have gone to smash, so to speak. I'd a notion there might be a place in here, where one of the men might have pushed in a box, don't you know."

"Well, of all the blithering nonsense!" broke out Capt. Kesteven impulsively, while Bertillot looked from one to the other, as if only half comprehending the drift of Mr. Headland's remarks.

"A box—in 'ere!" he echoed. "But non, m'sieu', zere is no box. Zis is my cabin—my own—no one sets ze foot in 'ere but myself."

"Quite right, skipper. I see now I am wrong. No room to hide a cat in here." Cleek swung round slowly on his heel, then as his hat slipped from his fingers to the floor, stooped slowly to pick it up.

"Bit of a facer for me, eh, what?" he said dejectedly. Then, as he caught sight of an oil stove standing on an empty packing case, he smacked his lips. "Have a morning cup of tea and an egg, eh? 'Pon me soul, I could do with a cup myself."

Jean Bertillot looked him up and down in withering contempt. "M'sieu' is pleased to joke. I not 'ave time for morning tea."

"Like a little something stronger, eh?" Cleek chuckled inanely; then lurched over, accidentally striking a case of eggs, packed by the egg factor at Havre.

Jean Bertillot uttered a hurried exclamation, and Cleek blundered away again, apologizing profusely.

"I'm like a bull in a china shop," he muttered under his breath, as he mopped his forehead with his handkerchief. Then, suddenly he went off on another tack. "Tell you what—it's so precious dark in here, and stuffy—faugh! Let's have that porthole opened." He lurched over, this time catching his foot in the black-dyed matting which covered the floor and, under the circumstances, it was only natural that he should lose his balance. With a hasty exclamation of dismay, he clutched hold of the nearest crate of eggs, righting himself from what would have been a foolish—and hasty—fall, and sent the crate clattering to the floor with a heavy crash that made everything in the cabin clatter and jangle together.

Bertillot's face grew red with anger as the lid burst open, and the top layer of eggs tumbled out pellmell over the floor. Considering the force of the fall, it was surprising that more eggs had not broken, and Cleek, fairly covered with confusion at the blunder he had made, tried to make restitution by saving as many as possible, to a running accompaniment of oaths and maledictions from Bertillot, who, when there were only the broken yolks to be seen, darted from the cabin, returning in a second with a cloth of a brilliant yellow color, with which he wiped up the stains. Still apologetic, Cleek raised himself up.

"I think, m'sieur, a cigarette would not be unacceptable." He stopped short, as a faint clicking sound came through the closed door; but only for a second; then he fumbled clumsily in his pocket, pulling out his cigarette case and holding it toward Bertillot.

The Breton scowled, but his love of good tobacco triumphed, and he put out a brawny hand. Like a flash Cleek's hand closed on it, and Narkom leaped forward. Came a struggle—short, sharp, infinitely fierce—then: the snapping of steel against steel, the harsh music of the handcuffs, and Bertillot stood a prisoner, while Capt. Kesteven, too dazed by the sudden turn of events, gazed helplessly at the three of them.

"Good heavens!" he cried out at last. "Are you mad! Mr. Narkom, I appeal to you! This is rankest idiocy! What has Jean done?"

Cleek whipped round upon him, breathing hard, a something bright, triumphant, gleaming in his eyes.

"He has smuggled his last tube of saccharine into the country, my friend—that's what he's done!" he said, with a little theatrical gesture that sat oddly upon the personality of George Headland.

"Impossible!" Capt. Kesteven's face still showed utter disdain of the matter. "How has he done it, man? How could he?"

"By a very simple but effective plan. I rather think you will find the tubes in those hard-boiled eggs, over there, and I shouldn't be surprised if the pats of butter had not got their little loads also."

He stepped over to the big crate and lifted an egg from it, tapping the shell upon the window sill, while Bertillot, a writhing, cursing, furious Thing, watched him with absolute hatred in his eyes. The shell broke, and he severed the egg with his fingers. In the center of the crumbling, yellow yolk lay a tiny glass tube, an inch or so long, filled with what appeared to be white powder.

For a moment there was a silence—tense, terrible, fraught with the bitter disappointment of a broken faith, the bitter triumph of a task fulfilled.

Then:

"Bertillot—Jean—Jean! And I would have trusted you with my life!" broke forth the captain in a dull, hurt voice, as the man stood looking sullenly at him.

But Cleek laid a gentle hand upon the captain's shoulder.

"You wouldn't if you knew he was cousin to Gaston Merode, the worst Apache in Paris," said he quietly. "I've a good memory for faces, mon ami, and I haven't lived in the old 'Twisted Arm' days for nothing. Margot's slave! Margot's pet! Margot's pretty tool for the execution of her vile work! A dollar to a ducat she's at the bottom of this!"

The man made no response; merely stood there in a sullen silence, and Cleek switched round upon his heel and laid a hand upon the superintendent's arm.

"How did I guess?" he said, in answer to Mr. Narkom's excited query. "Firstly, I wasn't so impressed with that mourning idea as the rest of you, and when any one sees a match strike itself on a box, by invisible hands, I felt sure that some trickery was being done. And that's the explanation of the Vanishing Lady trick, as our friend Mr. Devant makes it. A clever trick, too, by Jupiter! Clever as sin. Simply black against black. Put a man in black suit, mask and gloves, in the center of equally black surroundings, and I'll swear you won't any of you see him. Bertillot could pass from one cabin to the other unnoticed. I confess I was a bit puzzled about his method of smuggling in the stuff, until I saw that egg timer over there."

He pointed to the somewhat old-fashioned contrivance standing on a little shelf just above the oil stove and Narkom sighed in a sort of dumb admiration.

"That settled it. Then, again, a fal like that which the crate receive ought to have smashed every egg i the place, and when I picked them u and helped the good work a little bi further with my fingers, I knew I wa right. I had suspected somethin when I picked up the chip of egg shell just by the table, and the yello cloth settled the matter. Why th yellow cloth, my friend? Because i would show no yellow stains, afte wiping away the yolk, when the tube were pressed into the egg. A cleve trick, Monsieur Jean Bertillot, a ver clever trick."

FASHION'S LATEST WORD IN SMART CREATIONS

BY FRANCES MARSHALL

Details Only Thing to Cling to In Our Transitional Fashions

At the left, an afternoon frock of white embroidered voile, and on the right an unusual model of silk and Chinese embroidery.

It seems as if never before—or at least not for many years—have fashions been in such a state of transition as they are this summer. Not even the most experienced dress prophets can predict which way our waists are going. Are they going to rise or descend, grow larger or smaller? And what about skirts? Are they to grow shorter, or longer, or are they to remain as they are? Which of the many bouffant effects will gain supremacy over the others, or will they all remain in fashion? And what about sleeves—what of the many things that may happen about sleeves is going to happen?

Nobody knows the answer to any of these questions.

At first appearance, the fashions of today seem rather definite. We wear full, short skirts, and the things that go with them, we say. But when we look at the many details of our clothes, we realize that consistency is not in them; and that, after all, they are about the only thing that we can consider.

Sleeves may be anything from mere shoulder straps to long, cuffed affairs that almost hide the finger tips. Collars are anything from ruffs that inclose the chin to flaring, upstanding frills that rise about the shoulders. Shoes are high or low. Bodices are tight, or else so loose that the waistline appears larger than the shoulders. Skirts, now generally short, have drapery and trimming from top to hem, roundabout, up and down, and everywhere.

As for the materials used in summer frocks, they, too, are of wide variety. Silks, satins, spangled nets, laces and tulle for evening, linen, awning cloth, rajah, pongee and cotton fabrics for daytime, with silk, voile and other thin materials for afternoon—all are in good fashion.

Summer Hats.

Flowers and ribbon are much used on the summer hats.

Picot edged ribbon is especially smart and it is so crisp and attractive that it can hardly be used other than in a successful way.

One lovely hat is of black straw with loops of bright blue, inch-wide picot-edged ribbon fastened one next to the other all the way around the crown. The loops are long enough just to reach the edge of the brim.

Leghorn hats are worn with afternoon frocks. One of these is trimmed with the heads of artificial daisies, fastened at intervals of about an inch all over the crown and brim. Simple, indeed, is this arrangement. It is, of course, necessary to fasten the flowers on tight—but that is all.

A sport hat of pink straw has for its only trimming a big three-petaled flower—with the petals made of velvet a shade deeper than the hat. The petals are stitched tightly down to the crown of the hat with heavy stitches of black silk.

This is a season of veils and veils can be depended on to give much style to the hat. With a tan hat trimmed with black feathers is worn a tan veil patterned with a black thread.

Magpie Effects.

The shops show an unusually large number of white crepes and mulls embroidered in black, in dots, diamonds and flower designs. Black and white stripes of all sorts are in vogue, and it is an easy conclusion to draw that the magpie fashion has returned. In the making of these striking black and white combinations it is a wise dressmaker who knows enough to abandon the use of all trimming save that afforded by the design of the fabric. A little touch of color—dark bright green, deep orange or dull purple—is permissible and when desired some plain net at the sleeves and collar. But it is the part of wisdom to omit the use of figured laces, buttons or any sort of trimming on a frock made from one of the striking black-and-white fabrics.

Linen frock of brown, with collar of white and tie of black, for a serviceable all-day suit.

The Fashionable Coiffure.

All sorts of predictions are heard nowadays anent the coming mode for hair arrangement. At the present things are at a standstill, it would seem, so far as hair fashions are concerned and most women of fashion are contenting themselves this summer with wearing their hair in the way most becoming, whether it be well over the ears and forehead, bobbed all around, high off from the ears and brow, in a low coil at the back of the neck or in the so-generally-becoming pompadour style.

The Spanish arrangement apparently did not take. Although the stores offer a supply of very attractive high Spanish combs, there are comparatively few women who have mastered this style of hairdressing as yet. It is quite a striking fact, which you may have noticed, that the younger girls have, so far, held off from this mode of hair arrangement. With a really remarkable persistence they seem to be clinging to the side part, the little rounded ear locks and the graceful fan-shaped coil at a point midway of the crown and the nape of the neck.

There are indications, ever so vague, that the coming mode of hair arrangement will show it dressed low in the neck, but in a fashion that suggests the mode of 1880 more than that of 1866 or the Spanish style. This new arrangement would show the hair firmly fastened over the ears and at the nape of the neck with a rather artificial-looking coil or group of curls falling from midway up the back of the head to the neck. More than anything else this new mode would suggest what our mothers knew as the "water-fall" head dress.

Serge models of interesting line and detail.

Two sport costumes, the one on the right of serge, the one on the left of linen.

Two frocks of taffeta that show many of the varying details of midsummer fashions.

Two smart street suits and an equally smart evening frock.

Ruffled cape of silk and rose-trimmed straw hat.

What is alike in the three afternoon frocks pictured above? Nothing, save the full skirts.

Quaint costume for little girl, French in origin, and of bygone days in inspiration.

Nobody knows the answer to any of these questions.

At first appearance, the fashions of today seem rather definite. We wear full, short skirts, and the things that go with them, we say. But when we look at the many details of our clothes, we realize that consistency is not in them; and that, after all, they are about the only thing that we can consider.

Sleeves may be anything from mere shoulder straps to long, cuffed affairs that almost hide the finger tips. Collars are anything from ruffs that inclose the chin to flaring, upstanding frills that rise about the shoulders. Shoes are high or low. Bodices are tight, or else so loose that the waistline appears larger than the shoulders. Skirts, now generally short, have drapery and trimming from top to hem, roundabout, up and down, and everywhere.

As for the materials used in summer frocks, they, too, are of wide variety. Silks, satins, spangled nets, laces and tulle for evening, linen, awning cloth, rajah, pongee and cotton fabrics for daytime, with silk, voile and other thin materials for afternoon—all are in good fashion.

Summer Hats.

Flowers and ribbon are much used on the summer hats.

Picot edged ribbon is especially smart and it is so crisp and attractive that it can hardly be used other than in a successful way.

One lovely hat is of black straw with loops of bright blue, inch-wide picot-edged ribbon fastened one next to the other all the way around the crown. The loops are long enough just to reach the edge of the brim.

Leghorn hats are worn with afternoon frocks. One of these is trimmed with the heads of artificial daisies, fastened at intervals of about an inch all over the crown and brim. Simple, indeed, is this arrangement. It is, of course, necessary to fasten the flowers on tight—but that is all.

A sport hat of pink straw has for its only trimming a big three-petaled flower—with the petals made of velvet a shade deeper than the hat. The petals are stitched tightly down to the crown of the hat with heavy stitches of black silk.

This is a season of veils and veils can be depended on to give much style to the hat. With a tan hat trimmed with black feathers is worn a tan veil patterned with a black thread.

Magpie Effects.

The shops show an unusually large number of white crepes and mulls embroidered in black, in dots, diamonds and flower designs. Black and white stripes of all sorts are in vogue, and it is an easy conclusion to draw that the magpie fashion has returned. In the making of these striking black and white combinations it is a wise dressmaker who knows enough to abandon the use of all trimming save that afforded by the design of the fabric. A little touch of color—dark bright green, deep orange or dull purple—is permissible and when desired some plain net at the sleeves and collar. But it is the part of wisdom to omit the use of figured laces, buttons or any sort of trimming on a frock made from one of the striking black-and-white fabrics.

The Fashionable Coiffure.

All sorts of predictions are heard nowadays anent the coming mode for hair arrangement. At the present things are at a standstill, it would seem, so far as hair fashions are concerned and most women of fashion are contenting themselves this summer with wearing their hair in the way most becoming, whether it be well over the ears and forehead, bobbed all around, high off from the ears and brow, in a low coil at the back of the neck or in the so-generally-becoming pompadour style.

The Spanish arrangement apparently did not take. Although the stores offer a supply of very attractive high Spanish combs, there are comparatively few women who have mastered this style of hairdressing as yet. It is quite a striking fact, which you may have noticed, that the younger girls have, so far, held off from this mode of hair arrangement. With a really remarkable persistence they seem to be clinging to the side part, the little rounded ear locks and the graceful fan-shaped coil at a point midway of the crown and the nape of the neck.

There are indications, ever so vague, that the coming mode of hair arrangement will show it dressed low in the neck, but in a fashion that suggests the mode of 1880 more than that of 1866 or the Spanish style. This new arrangement would show the hair firmly fastened over the ears and at the nape of the neck with a rather artificial-looking coil or group of curls falling from midway up the back of the head to the neck. More than anything else this new mode would suggest what our mothers knew as the "water-fall" head dress.

DIVING WITH THE MERMAIDS

It's the Nearest to Flying the Human Can Do, This Sailing Through the Air from a Spring Board and Then Shooting Through the Calm, Cool Depths.

IT IS as near flying as a person can get. Of course, one may take a little flight in an aeroplane or make an ascent in a balloon, but it is the aeroplane or balloon which is doing the flying and not the occupant of the machine. In diving it is the person who is doing it and not a machine. You sail through the air and then when you strike the water there is the same motion and you can control your movements with the natural ease of a bird or fish.

How often have you been in the air with absolutely no support anywhere for your body? Maybe you have jumped up once or twice and both your feet left the ground at the same time. If you are an athlete this may not be an infrequent occurrence, but to the ordinary person it is unusual.

Now, in swimming one has almost the feeling of a bird in the air. It might sound better to state that one has the feeling of a fish in the water, but the bird comparison sounds better to those who know the delights of gently swimming through the water, not racing or contesting with anyone else, but just gently floating along. And one feels just like an eagle far, far up in the air, apparently motionless, save now and then for a few beats of the wings just floating along.

That is the feeling one has in swimming, when one can swim properly. And by properly is not meant the correct stroke, exactly, but easily, with no more effort, or hardly as much, as one uses in walking; when one can swim and not bother about whether he has the right stroke or not, but just knows he is swimming and enjoying it and using very little effort.

But it is in the dive that one gets the real thrills of flying, such as the swallow darting through the air must feel. And it is all for the brief space of a few seconds.

Hardly 10 per cent of the women who swim can dive. Why? Because they have never tried. And why have they never tried? Because they are timid about it. But it is easier to learn to dive than learn to swim.

All one has to do to learn to dive correctly is to try it once. Nine times out of ten the first dive, that is, the straight plunge, probably of 3 or 4 feet, is made correctly. Sometimes it is not. Perhaps the body falls flat on the water. But after one gets up her courage to take the initial plunge she will keep it up until she has learned to dive correctly—that is, the straight plunge.

In this initial dive the effort is all in the feet and legs. The feet are planted firmly and the body is bent over the water, with the arms extended above the head and the hands meeting, or almost meeting. The diver leans over until the upper part of the body is on the verge of overbalancing the lower part and at this moment she must give a slight spring, and, holding the body perfectly rigid, strike the water. The hands must strike the water first, just in front of the head. In that way there is no shock, the hands opening the water for the head. Sometimes a person may dive a distance of a few feet with the head hitting the water first, but this cannot be done from any height and the beginner should never try it.

When one has never dived the actual performance appears hard; there seems to be a shock about it. But this is wrong. It requires the minimum of effort to dive and there is no shock. One strikes the water and instinctively raises the head. The more quickly the head is raised the sooner one comes to the surface. After one has dived two or three times she knows how to control her movements under water. If she wishes to come to the surface at once, she merely raises her head and perhaps makes a stroke or two with the hands. If she wishes to dive deep she can keep the head down but with the hands still extended so that the head will not strike the bottom of the pool or stream. That is one of the important things for the beginner to learn—always keep the hands in advance of the head when diving directly down.

If one wants to plunge through the water the head and arms are raised slightly and the body is held in a horizontal position. One can thus float through the water and the impetus of the spring will carry her many feet. Then when the breath cannot be held longer or when the body ceases its motion she raises her head and hands and comes to the surface. When diving one instinctively holds the breath and so no directions are necessary along this line.

Every woman who swims should learn to dive. It doubles the pleasure. After that first dive one learns rapidly, and in a very short time knows how to dive into shallow water; how to dive deep down and remain under water; how to plunge through the water after the dive, and numerous other little details. And then she is ready to take up fancy styles of diving. These latter are made from springboards and sometimes from a height. But it is easy after one learns the elementary dive.

And it is in this flying through the air that the human body can assume more graceful poses in a short space of time than under any other conditions. The swan dive is probably the most beautiful of these. In this, after the spring from the board, the body is in almost horizontal position, with the head held up and the arms extended, wide apart in front. Then as the body descends the head is lowered and the hands brought together to open a way for the head to enter the water while the body is held rigid.

On account of the change in the position of the body it appears that one is in the air longer than is really the case.

The scissors dive is another that is graceful, but cannot compare in grace with the swan. In the scissors one jumps from the springboard straight up in the air and then the upper part of the body is quickly bent down and the head and hands enter the water in a direct perpendicular position. At the moment the head and arms are inclined downward the body appears to be suspended momentarily in the air.

There are backward dives, but these do not compare in grace with those which are made face forward. There is more effort and the effort is too apparent. The swan dive, especially, appears to be perfectly natural.

This diving, as said before, doubles the pleasure of swimming, and in most dives absolutely no effort is necessary. Therefore, the woman who swims should learn to dive. And, as said before, all it needs is the plucking up of a little courage for that initial plunge. After that it will all come easy. One enjoys it and there is no danger of any injury to one. There is no strain on any part of the body and there is no physical shock.

The woman who swims has a physical advantage over her sister who cannot, and the woman who can dive also has an advantage over the woman who cannot.
